KILLED BY HOGS.

Well Known Farmer of Multnomah, Meets a Horrible Death.

Portland, Oct. 28.—J. B. Gilbert, a well known farmer living near the Seven-Mile Post on the Base Line road, was killed by a boar Sunday night, as a result of his having attempted to stop a fight between two of his hogs. The boar, which is a vicious animal, bit through an artery in his leg, and the unfortunate man jumped into another pen, it is believed, to save himself. He was found dead at noon yesterday by his brother-in-law, his body having been partially eaten by the hogs, so that it was hardly recognizable.

Much of the information concerning his death is only guesswork. It is supposed that he went into the pen to separate two of the hogs and stop their fighting; and that while so engaged one thrust him through the leg, striking an artery. From the place in which he was discovered, it is supposed that he had strength enough left to climb into another pen, but the loss of blood was so great that he was unable to save himself and lay down to die, while the hogs gathered around and consumed his body.

When he did not appear his family were considerably alarmed, but did not think of searching for him around the farm. At noon yesterday his brother-in-law, L. M. Edwards, found the remains of Mr. Gilbert in the pen. He was a man 50 years of age and leaves a wife and three children. The coroner went to the scene of the trouble this afternoon and is now arranging to hold an inquest. Mr. Gilbert had made a specialty of raising fine hogs, but formerly had difficulty with the boar supposed to have caused his death. At 3 o'clock today no arrangements had been made for the funeral.

HERMIT KILLED.
