OF CHINESE DESCENT.

Claimed That George Wilson's Mother Was Chinese Woman.

"That story about my being of Chinese descent was all started by my press agent about 10 years ago," said George Wilson, the noted minstrel, on his recent visit to this place. But still Mr. Wilson did not dispute it, probably because he did not think it required contradiction.

The story was published broadcast all over the country at the time the noted minstrel's father was an Englishman and his mother a Chinese woman. It went to the effect that the Englishman drifted into China and became immensely wealthy; that he fell in love with the Chinese woman, married her and that George was the only issue of the marriage. Then there was a romantic story about the separation of the husband from the wife and the fight over the child. It was told how Wilson was kidnapped from his mother by his father and of the flight to America. How his father died later in poverty and how the boy battled for existence and afterwards drifted into the show business. His subsequent career has been a successful one. Wilson is getting old now and will probably not remain in the business much longer.

Whether or not the press agent who started the story really had any foundation for it is not known, yet when one looks at Wilson while the burnt cork is removed from his face he sees evidence that bears out the story. His eyes are inclined to the almond shape and his mouth and high cheek bones furnish further evidence. His voice also in ordinary conversation and song carries a sound similar to that heard in those sections in our cities known as Chinatown.

It all may be a rank fake and slander on the noted black-cork artist, but the fact that he takes it good naturedly and does not deny it lends greater reason to those to believe the story for doing so.

FINE MARE SHOT.

Supposed to Be the Result of a Hunter's Carelessness.

Dave Ingram lost a fine brood mare last week through the carelessness or wickedness of some hunter. The mare was in Mr. Ingram's pasture, on Birch creek, and some one shot her in the leg, just above the ankle, breaking it and making it necessary for Mr. Ingram to kill her.

This is the second affair of this kind which has occurred in that neighborhood during the last summer. Some people who go hunting are very careless of the way they handle their firearms, and as a consequence valuable property and life is endangered. As a rule the farmers are very accommodating in letting the sportsmen hunt on their places, but such work as the above by a few hoodlums will cause them to declare war against all hunting. While Mr. Ingram does not know certainly that his animal was shot accidentally, he does not think that it was done purposely, but he says no more hunting will be allowed on his place and notices forbidding such have been posted. Hereafter the man caught shooting on his place will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law for trespassing.

Corn in Oregon.

One of the new features of the Oregon harvest this year is the increased crop of the state. It has never been claimed that Oregon climate is adapted to the growth of corn in the most perfect state. The nights are not warm enough. The greatest growth of corn takes place during the night, according to expert agriculturists. The crisp breezes of Oregon nights are conducive to sound sleep, but not to growing corn. The altitude and climatic conditions are not adapted to this crop. The soil is not at fault, the moisture is plentiful, the daylight and sunshine are all that could be wanted, but the breezy, cool nights hold back the corn crop, until the early frost kills it, before it is matured, in the eastern and central portions of the state. But in the southern counties, the climatic conditions are most favorable. The sandy soil, the hot nights, the warm, exhilarating showers, make that an ideal section. In Jackson county this year the crop amounted to 30,000 bushels. Other sections adjacent to this county are looking forward to increased acreage next year. The homeseeker from the corn belt can be accommodated in all his choice vocations. The Oregon corn crop will receive more attention, as more corn growers find out the high adaptability of Southern Oregon to that cereal.

MEN'S OUTFITTERS

COMMENCE TOURNAMENT.

Golf Players Begin With the Qualifying Rounds.

The ground being very damp did not keep the enthusiastic golf players from the course south of town this morning to open the first golf tournament in Pendleton. This very popular game in the East only found enthusiasts in Pendleton within the past few months, but in that short time many have acquired the fever and dozens may be seen each day trying their skill with the stick. Pendleton now has about 50 members and the number is swelling daily.

This week the qualifying rounds will be played preparatory for the real work of the tournament of next week. All the members are expected to enter this week and qualify for the handicap schedule to be played Monday and Tuesday of next week. These two first days are expected to carry with them more interest in the sport than any of the events of the week until the championship finals are played during the last days of the week.

All wishing to enter the tournament are requested to spend as much time as possible on the ground this week and at the end of the week the scores made must be handed in to the secretary, which will qualify those doing so to enter the tournament.

Several handsome prizes will be awarded the best players and this will add to the interest.
