CAREY LAND ACT

THE STATE BECOMES OWNER OF 1,000,000 ACRES.

Under the National Irrigation Act the State is Entitled to a Certain Sum for Preparation of Arid Lands.

Portland, Nov. 5.—In the discussion of the Carey Arid Land Act, there is much misunderstanding among the people at large. In a personal letter to The Portland Daily Journal, Major Alfred F. Sears, state irrigation engineer for Oregon and a member of the Society of American Civil Engineers, sets forth the facts, and the status of Oregon in national irrigation legislation. The letter follows:

"To the Editor of the Oregon Daily Journal: May I be permitted to say a word in review of the leading editorial of The Journal of Thursday last, concerning irrigation. I will take up serially, the statements. That article, recognizing that the Journal intended to be just, but may have conveyed erroneous impressions if readers generally draw the inferences that appear to be legitimate.

"Oregon is now in position to receive her share of the National Irrigation fund, which will be divided among the arid states for the purpose of promoting irrigation as a national and state question."

"But Oregon does not receive any irrigation fund, nor any land under the national irrigation act. The state will be entitled under that act, to the expenditure of a certain sum in irrigation works, subject to the opinion of the engineers of the United States geological bureau, and under their conduct of the disbursement. The state receives neither land nor money. It does allow the government to put in shape for settlers a certain amount of land, to be prepared for irrigation by contractors, who will be paid for their work out of the sum now on hand in the public treasury for the sale of lands in Oregon. That sum is now about $1,000,000.

"Under the Carey act, on the contrary, the state becomes the owner of 1,000,000 acres on condition of irrigating these acres. The state, under the act, does the work precisely as the national government does it, i. e., by the employment of contractors.

"But, as the state has no possession of the money received for the sale of her lands, she has to allow the contractor a lien on the land he irrigates, for the security of his pay. He is not, cannot, and never will, become owner of one acre of the land he irrigates.

"Only the state is owner till it is sold by the state, and not the contractor, to an actual settler in portions not exceeding 160 acres to any one individual."

New Coal Product.

Very little is known in this country concerning briquettes. For 20 years they have been used in Europe, notably in France, Germany, Belgium and Spain. Popularly, they are known there as the "poor man's fuel," for the reason that they cost less than the highest grades of coal and give out heat in greater quantities, bulk for bulk, than any form of anthracite, bituminous or the other forms of coal. Briefly, briquettes are made out of waste materials or culm, which is the residue from the breakers after the mine coal has been broken up into the various market sizes. Pea coal is the smallest size that is made at the breakers and all of the fragments of coal from the various breakages which go through the screen, accumulate in what are called "culm banks" at the mines. These are absolutely worthless to the companies, and in Pennsylvania and other coal mining districts throughout the country they fill up in enormous banks that are absolutely a waste product, except in the sense of being available for briquettes, which industry has been practically untouched in this country. The advantages of briquette fuel are numerous: It is absolutely without dust; each briquette is in the shape of a cube, running in size from that of chestnut coal to 20 to 40 pounds per brick, for the use of locomotives and large plants; it is easy of shipment and economical in its space taken up in bins; it burns without smoke and gives out more heat than coal.—Exchange.

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES.

Charles Gilman Finds a Letter From His Father Written in 1863.

Charles A. Gilman, of Lewiston, Maine, now in Pendleton, a nephew of "Uncle" Charlie Craig, the Pilot Rock pioneer who died last month, finds among the correspondence of his uncle a letter written from Waldo county, Maine, by Mr. Gilman's father in 1863. This letter quotes some figures, now interesting, as to current prices of necessities of life in New England during the civil war.

Flour is quoted at $9 to $14 per barrel; corn, $1.20 a bushel; sheeting, 45c a yard; calico, 25 cents a yard; tobacco, $1 a pound; tea, 85 cents a pound; sugar 16 cents a pound.

Mr. Gilman's mother is the only living sister of the late Mr. Craig, and he is in the state as her representative in matters pertaining to the estate.

Mr. Gilman is accompanied by his wife and will leave tomorrow for their home in Maine. Mr. Gilman says that he and his wife are both highly pleased with this county and they are thinking seriously of returning here to remain.
