IN OLD UMATILLA

MAJOR MOORHOUSE
GROWS REMINISCENT.

Two Incidents Connected With the Early History of "Umatilla Landing"—Officer and Lover Side by Side—Indian Baby Left by Warriors.

Major Lee Moorhouse, of Pendleton, tells of two interesting episodes in the early history of old Umatilla City. One was the love story of an old army officer and the other was of the capture of an Indian baby and the romantic work of an old blind Indian woman in sustaining it during its mother's absence.

The major is one of the best posted men in Umatilla county on its early history. His hobby is the study of the Indian character as well as his history, and a bit of romance either among the red men or the whites never escapes his attention.

"It was in the early days of Umatilla City," said the major, "when an old army officer was stationed at Umatilla City to oversee some government work that was being done there. The channel of the Columbia River was being improved above the town and the old officer was constant by on the water in a small boat seeing that things were being done right.

"The work, like most of the government work progressed slowly, and the old man was kept there for a long time. He became well thought of at the place, and formed a number of acquaintances, among them a young woman with whom he became much infatuated. She finally returned his attentions and they became engaged. Well, it was the same old story. They agreed to get married and the date was fixed.

"But before the day came the woman took sick and died. The old officer was constantly at her bedside during her sickness and saw that she was given all of the comfort and medical attention in those times. After her death he gave her a respectable burial in the little cemetery on the hill above the town and then registered a vow. The old fellow swore he would never marry, and he kept his word.

"He also made a request of his friends in his bereavement, and that was that should he ever die in this country they would see that his body was laid by the side of his dead lover.

"Work proceeded among the rapids up the river. The old officer, more gloomy every day, superintended his work. He seemed oblivious to everything around him. The rapid current tossed his little boat about as if it were a corkie shell. He did not seem to notice it. It was remarked among the frontiersmen of the place that the old man was losing interest in everything; that he appeared to be living a dream.

"Finally one day the current of the river was stronger than usual. The wind blew stronger. The old officer as usual was in his boat overseeing the work. The frail vessel fell into a trough of the stream and in an instant was capsized, and the old man was sent headlong beneath the surface.

"He was not strong enough to do battle with the swift current of the Columbia and was drowned almost instantly. The men on the works all turned their attention to the rescue of the body and with luck bordering on the miraculous they succeeded.

"Another grave was dug on the little hill overlooking the town. It was by the side of the grave of his dead lover. Everybody turned out at the funeral and the fact was demonstrated that the hearts of the most sturdy pioneers are just as tender as other people's. They all felt the solemnity of the occasion and there was scarcely a dry eye at the grave.

"Two monuments still mark the place. They are so close together that at a short distance there appears to be but one. But each bears an inscription finely carved, and the two tell the story of love, tragedy and death."

An Indian Story.

"As has been already stated in the East Oregonian," continued Major Moorhouse, "the government patrolled that portion of the river with a gunboat during the last Indian war. Everybody had the Indian scare and the soldiers were about as timid as the civilians. A small band of Indians were reported to be crossing the river near Umatilla City and the gunboat steamed out to intercept them.

"The gunboat reached the scene

just as the last canoe of the party had reached within a few yards of the shore. A fusillade was discharged at the retreating party, and when everything looked safe a detachment from the boat was sent ashore to ascertain what had been accomplished and the whereabouts of the Indians. The detachment found an Indian baby of a few months of age and brought it back as a prisoner of war.

"The boat then returned to Umatilla City and a detailed account of the night soon spread about the town. The women wanted to see the baby and I went aboard the boat and brought the little fellow ashore. When curiosity was satisfied I took the captive back to the boat, but the soldiers refused to accept it. But after hard pleading I convinced the officer that it was a prisoner of war and succeeded in getting it off my hands.

"The boat then sailed back to the scene of war, the soldiers expecting that the mother of the child would return for it. They did not find her, but found an old blind squaw who had also been abandoned, and they merely left the child in their charge.

"That night the Indians sent a runner back to look after the old woman and the baby. He brought them some food, placed them in hiding among the rocks and stretched a cord from their place of concealment to the river's edge. Night by night the old blind woman felt her way along this cord to the river and secured water and returned to her hiding place, keeping this up for a number of days, sustaining the Indian baby and herself until the troublesome hours were over and she was joined by her tribe.

"The baby was returned to its mother and grew to be a stalwart brave."

MISS MONIE BOWEY

No. 38 Perry Street, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

A couple of winters ago I slipped on a frozen sidewalk and fell flat on my back. On being examined I found that I had sustained internal injuries which laid me up for more than two months. After that I noticed that I had pains in the back and groin which I never had before. I doctored and doctored for several months but as the pains increased instead of growing better I decided that I was not having the right treatment. Reading in the papers of the wonderful cures performed by Wine of Cardui I wrote to one of the parties and received a very satisfactory reply and I immediately sent for some. In a very short time I felt generally better and after seven weeks faithful use I was once more well and strong. I have never had a sick hour since and I daily bless your splendid medicine.

WINE OF CARDUI is one medicine that should always be kept on hand in every home for immediate use when female weakness first makes its appearance. Miss Bowey's painful and dangerous accident would not have resulted so seriously had she taken Wine of Cardui promptly.
