PIONEER IRRIGATIONIST HERE.

Joel Shomaker, of the Tacoma News Staff, Gathering Data for Prosperity Edition.

Joel Shomaker, special agricultural correspondent, permanently connected with the Tacoma Evening News, is visiting in Pendleton today.

Mr. Shomaker's hotel interviews and short talks with prominent farmers, business and professional men, upon the live issues of the day, are highly interesting features of the News, and are widely copied by the Northwest press.

Mr. Shomaker is one of the pioneer irrigationists of the Pacific Coast. He was one of the founders of the Irrigation Age, one of the very first exclusive irrigation publications of the West. He has been prominently connected with the subject in Utah and Colorado and thinks reclamation is the leading issue before the people of this country today.

During the last political campaign in Washington, Mr. Shomaker made a remarkable record in newspaper work in that state. He secured over 500 personal interviews with farmers, on the railroad commission question and did more to secure the actual sentiment of the people on that momentous issue than any other man in the state.

Mr. Shomaker is gathering data for a magnificent "Prosperity edition" of the News, which will be issued in the near future.

Mrs. Shomaker arrived from Salt Lake on the delayed train today, and was met by her husband. They will leave for Walla Walla on the mixed train this evening.

W. F. EARNHART,
ASSOCIATION BLOCK

HOME FROM CANADA

SPEAKS VERY HIGHLY OF AUSTRIAN SURGEON.

While at Philadelphia He Witnessed Six Operations by Dr. Lorenz That Were Wonderful—Had an Enjoyable Visit East.

Dr. W. G. Cole returned Saturday evening from his extended trip to his home in Canada and the East. He intended stopping with his mother in London, Canada, for Christmas, but left there two days earlier. This, perhaps, saved his life. Had he remained in London until Christmas evening, as his mother wanted him to, and as he intended, when he left here, he would have been on the train wrecked near London Friday in which 35 people were killed.

In speaking of the wreck and how close he came to being in it, Dr. Cole said he did not know why he started home and did not remain with his mother and meet two sisters whom he had not seen and who were coming to London to spend Christmas at home. It was his express purpose when he left here to spend Christmas with his mother, but he suddenly became possessed with the desire to come home and this caused him to miss the wreck.

The doctor went direct from here to Philadelphia, where he witnessed six operations by the famous Dr. Lorenz, the Austrian surgeon. He says that the feats accomplished by Dr. Lorenz are simply wonderful. He said:

"Dr. Lorenz is one of the finest gentlemen I ever met. All the newspaper notoriety and compliments thrown at him have not turned his head in the least. He is just a modest gentleman with none of the airs of a man puffed up. He is not a rich man, as might be adjudged by his fame. He is in moderate circumstances, but has made most of his money since coming to America.

"At the banquet given in honor of the doctor in Philadelphia, he gave an informal talk about his former life and how he came to be a success in dry surgery. When he was a young man attending medical college he had to give up the use of antiseptics of any kind, and was told to try dry surgery. Antiseptics of any kind would cause his flesh to break out in an aggravated form and he was forced to give up this work. After many hard struggles he has reached the roun of success."

From Philadelphia Dr. Cole went to Baltimore, where he visited the Johns Hopkins hospital, one of the most noted institutions of the kind in the world. He did not remain east as long as he had contemplated when he left, but he says he received much knowledge which will be of use to him in his work. He had a very pleasant visit home and the trip altogether was enjoyed.

IDAHO RANGES OVERSTOCKED.

Sheepmen Shipping Corn From the East to Meet Emergencies.

For the first time in the history of Idaho the sheepmen there are compelled to buy corn from the middle states for their sheep. M. B. Gwinn, secretary treasurer of the Idaho Woolgrowers' Association, who is in the city today, says the state now has more sheep than the range can supply during the coming winter, says the Salt Lake Telegram.

This congestion Mr. Gwinn says has been caused by the number of Utah and Montana herds which have been driven into the state during the past year and by the car shortage of the past summer. Mr. Gwinn declares that many sheep were held, awaiting the cars to transport them to the stock yards, until they were in no condition to be sent to the market, and would have to be taken back to the range.

The Oregon Short Line and Union Pacific have made the sheepmen of Idaho a special rate on corn from Nebraska, so that the cost of feeding the herds during the winter will be considerably reduced.

"The snowfall in Idaho this winter," says Mr. Gwinn, "is the best we have had for years, and assures good crops for the farmers and great ranges for the livestock men next year."

New Year's Receptions.

It is the desire of the East Oregonian to give a complete list of those who expect to hold receptions on New Year's day. To this end, all who will receive on that day are kindly requested to send in their names and street addresses, also the names of those who will assist them. The names should reach the office Wednesday forenoon.
