BETTER HIGHWAYS

J. W. ABBOTT OF GOOD ROADS INQUIRY, IN PENDLETON.

Has Traveled Extensively in the Pacific States, and Finds No Section Better Adapted to Good Country Roads Than Eastern Oregon.

J. W. Abbott, special agent of the Rocky Mountain and Pacific States division of the office of public roads inquiries, of the United States department of agriculture, is in Pendleton today, talking good roads and interesting the business men, taxpayers and citizens in this important subject.

Mr. Abbott is a practical man of large experience in his work and takes great interest in the readiness with which the people and the press of the Northwest has taken up this crusade for better highways.

"In all my travels through the West," said Mr. Abbott to a representative of the East Oregonian, "I have not found a more ready response to my requests for increased interest and action than that coming from the press and people of the states of Oregon and Washington."

"This campaign for improved roads through the great wheat and fruit belts of these states means untold wealth in return for the work being done. Good roads in a country increase the value of lands and improvements. It adds a charm to the physical appearance of the country which is not to be acquired in any other manner."

"There is no other work a community can do that will add so much to the attractiveness of the country, so much permanent worth to the locality and be of so much direct benefit to every member of the community, as that of building better highways."

"Roads are the common property of the country, they should be its pride. In order to fully develop the great resources lying all about this wonderful Northwest, it is absolutely necessary to improve conditions."

"A most excellent class of immigration is pouring into the Northwest, and will continue to pour in until after the gates of the Lewis and Clark fair are closed. In order to attract this good class of people and induce them to invest and become citizens of the unfolding empire of the Pacific, you must make an effort to present the most favorable appearance to them."

"The physical conditions in Oregon and Washington are more favorable to good roads than in any other section of the United States. The best roads of the United States are to be found in New York and Massachusetts, where the severe winters, deep freezing and clay soil form the most obdurate barriers to good roads."

"None of these adverse conditions are to be met in Oregon. Your climate is mild, your soil is adapted to all the simple surface treatment necessary to make a perfect road drainage is easily accomplished, and every physical condition that must be contended with, is favorable."

"There is no reason why Oregon, leading the world in many of the most valuable products of the farm, mine and orchard, should not also lead with good highways."

Asked in regard to sentiment in the Northwest on the Lewis and Clark fair, Mr. Abbott said:

"In this great territory which I have covered closely, from British Columbia to Los Angeles, I have not heard one whisper of opposition. The entire country recognizes it as the opportunity of the century, to make known the wondrous riches of the Northwest coast. The 20th century will not contain after the St. Louis fair, an occurrence that will approach in the slightest degree, the centennial of Lewis and Clark's expedition."

"The people are fully awake to the historic and educational scope of the fair and the Northwest will receive from this campaign of education one of the most highly cultured, thrifty, progressive tides of emigration that has ever come to this coast."

Mr. Abbott's interesting conversation flows on the progress of the good roads inquiry in different parts of the United States are equal to visits to the various sections of operation.

In the Central States, the great railways organized "Good Roads" trains, and advertised the meetings and conventions, and induced large delegations of citizens to attend and take active part in the discussions.

The office of public road inquiries, has issued a pamphlet on "Road Conventions in the South," which has been printed for free distribution to the public. It may be obtained by addressing Hon. Martin Dodge, director of the office of public road inquiries, department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.

In the January number of the Cosmopolitan, is an article by Congressman Brownlow, on the establishment of a good roads bureau, by the government, with special officers and powers. The article was of so much public interest that the forms of the Cosmopolitan were changed, after it was in press, to allow the insertion of Mr. Brownlow's letter.

Mr. Abbott spent Saturday and Sunday in Walla Walla, where great interest was taken in his mission. He goes from Pendleton direct to Denver.

He speaks in the highest terms of the work of Colonel R. C. Judson, industrial agent of the O. R. & N. in the good roads movement in Oregon, and urges the farmers to hold the institutes suggested by Mr. Judson. One of the foremost subjects for discussion at all future farmers' institutes will be good roads on which to haul good crops.

Mr. Abbott says that country roads in Oregon compare favorably to those in other sections of the West, where like conditions prevail. The most perfect roads on the Pacific Coast are to be found in Santa Clara valley, California.

In Colorado, where the gravel soil is most favorable, some excellent roads are found.

In Eastern Oregon the judicious expenditure of road tax under the supervision of expert men will bring as perfect a system of highways as can be found, he thinks. The soil, drainage, climate and topography all favor good country roads here.

Pendleton can engage in no more beneficial mission during the winter months, than the discussion of good country roads, as a means of inviting trade and making life in the country districts more pleasing to those whose lot is to live there.

Assessed at $1,050,000.

In yesterday's issue the East Oregonian stated that the property of school district No. 16 was assessed at $1,500,000. It should have read $1,050,000, as this is the valuation of the property in the district as shown by the assessor's books.

Horses are still disappearing in the Grant's Pass country, and indications are that a well organized gang of thieves is at work.
