IN SAN FRANCISCO

OBSERVATIONS OF AN EAST-ERN OREGON PILGRIM.

The Wondrous Spectacles of the California Seaport—The Observation Car for the Benefit of Visiting Sightseers.

San Francisco, Jan. 18.—(To the Editor.)—San Francisco is a big subject for a halting pen to tackle.

"I did not love them overmuch Till I had turned away; But now they glimmer through my dreams."

They haunt the summer day; The low brown hills, the bare brown hills.

Of San Francisco Bay. Not one slim blade of living green To make the soft slopes gay.

No dim secluded forest dells Where one might kneel and pray; But low brown hills, and bare brown hills.

Of San Francisco Bay.

The low brown hills are still here; some bare but many clothed with the fruits of the commerce of two continents which passes through this busy city; but among the many impressions which take root in the mind of the casual visitor here the idea that this busy city particularly feels the need of a place to kneel and play is apt to be very prominent, although there are many handsome piles of brick and stone with steeples pointing heavenward where the prayerfully inclined can listen to any shade of doctrine from the theology of Calvin and Loyola as expounded by their interpreters, to the Mahometanism of Swami Roam, the local apostle of the prophet.

On Market street, the principal business thoroughfare of this city, where at 12 o'clock and again at 4 the crowd is no thicker than if you are in a hurry you had better leave the sidewalk and take to the street, there are two restaurants under one management known as the Puritan Dining Room, which serve very excellent meals but which close their doors religiously at 12 o'clock on Saturday night and reopen again on Monday morning, conscientious, perhaps, but one cannot help speculating a little as to what the result would be if all the eating houses in this big city were Puritan.

One result would certainly be a flood of profanity from the hapless strangers within their gates beside which the solitary if somewhat choleric oath of "Uncle Toby" would not be a drop in the bucket.

Every line of business is represented here from the cripple who occupies a seat on the sidewalk with a basket on his knee, filled with lead-pencils, shoelaces and other valuable merchandise, to the large department store with a stock running perhaps into the hundreds of thousands, also many different kinds of public benefactors, sometimes called fakirs, with valuable discoveries along various lines, without which the human race have simply been dragging out a miserable existence for the last six thousand years.

Art galleries and book stores with stocks so large and so ridiculously cheap that it must certainly be a critical taste which cannot find something to please, the only trouble is to keep from going flat broke buying a lot of stuff which is a nuisance to pack around. In one corner of a window filled with paintings and statuary is one picture which arrests the attention of the passerby and once seen is apt to make him go a block or two out of his way for another look, a student is represented as burning the midnight oil only to twine the laurel wreath around the brows of death, death being represented by a grinning skull at his side, and underneath is the words, "What is the use?" bad philosophy may be but a very striking picture nevertheless.

And here, too, is found the ticket office of that wonderful road which perhaps more than any other of the world's highways, challenges the imagination, which reduces the time of Jules Verne's famous voyage round the world by two-thirds, and which, says a returned traveler, runs through the land made famous by the exploits of Alexander of Ghengiz Khan, and of Gomerlane, and which was also looked upon by the first of mankind for the cradle of our race was there, the Trans-Siberian railway, whose transportation charges are so moderate that any Russian peasant who can make the raise of $25 can travel from Moscow to Vladivostok, a distance of over 6000 miles.

At a corner on Market street stands an observation car which makes two trips around the city daily, taking about four hours to the trip and visiting Ocean Beach, Golden Gate Park, Cliff House, Union Iron Works, Presidio and other points of interest, these places would each require a separate letter so no attempt will be made to describe them here. The forms of entertainment which San Francisco offers to the stranger within her gates are many and varied, so that he is very apt if his time is limited to try to see too much in too short a time. Museums with collections of statuary, paintings, curious specimens in endless number, which the eye may wonder over, but whose significance the mind can hardly grasp. Theaters and concert halls in endless number where the visitor can find anything he wants from Nance O'Neil in "Lady Macbeth" to the lightest shade of performance known to the profession.

The drummer, who is usually a man of great talent in such things, and up San Francisco as the town where you can take $5 and have a better time than you can in New York or Chicago for $25, some allowance might, of course, be necessary for different definitions of a good time.

Not long ago a newspaper kept watch of its columns for a week to see what men or profession received the most notice or attention, with the result that the names of Morgan and Gould appeared 80 times, while those of Mark Twain and W. D. Howells only appeared four times, so says the paper. If you would become famous, become a millionaire. But that is not the last analysis in. In strolling around this town the faces which look down from the marble columns in its handsome public square are not its millionaires—Stanford, Flood or Fair, nor yet Gould or Vanderbilt or Huntington, but here stands Lincoln with his hand on the bowed head of the slave, and the words: "And on this act I invoke the blessing of Almighty God." Here Goethe and Schiller stand side by side. There the author of the "Star Spangled Banner" with the words of his song carved in the marble beside him, and here, too, is a column to the memory of Robert Louis Stevenson, with a fresh wreath of flowers from somebody with whom his memory is still green and this inscription from his writing: "To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little, to spend a little less, to make on the whole a family happier for your presence, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation, to renounce when that is necessary, and not be embittered, here is a lash for all that a man has of portitude and delicacy."

A fitting epitaph, surely, for one who from his sick bed was able to write to his friend.

"Life is over, life was gay. We have come the primrose way." M.
