TRIP ON THE OCEAN

FROM FRISCO'S SUNSHINE TO PORTLAND'S MISTS.

San Francisco Bay and the Golden Gate—Along the California Coast—Across the Bar of the Columbia—Stop at Astoria—Up the River to Portland.

Pacific Ocean, Feb. 4.—Not the least interesting part of the ocean trip from San Francisco to Portland is getting out through the Golden Gate.

If the traveler has not already realized the importance of San Francisco as a shipping point the number of ships of all nations through which the steamer winds its way from the wharf to the gate will give him some idea of it. From Liverpool, Glasgow, Bremen, Havre, Hong Kong, Melbourne and the islands of the Sea they are all here. Some are being towed to the wharves to load, others are already loaded putting out to sea. Some in drydock undergoing repairs, and many others anchored in the bay waiting to receive or discharge cargoes. Steam launches fitting to and fro. Ferries coming or going to the Oakland. Two of Uncle Sam's battleships and a number of transports, all go to make up rather an animated picture not soon to be forgotten.

A day of bright sunshine made a pleasant start for the trip. The California coast was plainly to be seen all day with dwelling houses here and there. On the other side as far as the eye could reach a broad expanse of smooth and sunlit water and out there somewhere it surely does not require a very violent stretch of the imagination to suppose there might lie the islands of the Blessed, of which so much has been written in poetry and prose.

That route is barred to steamers, you'll never lift again. The purple-painted headlands of the lordly keeps at Sausalito. They're just beyond the skyline, however, so far you cruise. In a ram you—damn you—liner, with a brace of bucking screws.

And when you're thrashing crippled with broken bridge and rail on a drogue of dead convictions to hold your head to sale; Calm as the Flying Dutchman from truck to taffrail dressed, You'll see the old three-decker for the island of the Blest.

Hull down, hull down, and under she dwindles to a speck. With noise of pleasant music and dancing on her deck: All's well, all's well aboard her; she's dropped you far behind. With a scent of old-world roses through the fog that ties you blind.

Her crew are babes or madmen; her port is all to make. You're manned by truth and science, and you steam for steaming sake. We'll tinker up your engines, you know your business best. She's taking tired people to the Islands of the Blest.

Night comes and a light house somewhere on shore sends out its friendly warning across the water. Other lights further seaward show that others besides ourselves are occupying floating homes. Morning brings fog, rain and wind and the crowd at the breakfast table is considerably diminished. The rain lasts nearly all day with a sultry sky through which the sun vainly tries to show itself occasionally. The fog lifts long enough to show a rocky coastline on which the waves are dashing themselves into spray. The change from yesterday sunshine to this fog and rain is decidedly depressing and the probability of the Islands of the Blest being anywhere in the neighborhood is decidedly vague.

But in spite of fog and head wind, steady progress is made northward and the Columbia river is reached some time in the night. The bar is decidedly choppy and is not crossed until daylight. A stop of two hours at Astoria to unload freight gives time to get your feet on solid ground once more, a privilege which is appreciated. The ride up the river is a pleasant change from the briny, the sun makes its appearance once more and is very welcome. A number of ships are not being towed down the river loaded with lumber and other Oregon products on their way to other lands. No other stops are made and Portland is reached at 6 p. m.

Back of the Cough

There's more to a cough than the tickling sensation in the throat. There's a cold behind that and a weak spot to be strengthened.

Cough mixtures get as far as the tickling sensation in the throat; that is where their work stops. They may relieve the cough; but they do not cure the cold and certainly will not build up the system. Their action is therefore merely local and of necessity very limited.

Scott's Emulsion does not stop at the throat. It eases that too, but its mission is beyond that. It not only cures the cough, but it cures the cold which is back of the cough. It searches out the real cause of the trouble and corrects the wasting and weakening conditions. In its passage through the body it distributes strength to the worn out tissues, feeds the blood corpuscles and tones up the body. There is nothing better than Scott's Emulsion to build up a run down system after a cold.
