GOING HOME TO DIE

COLE YOUNGER AT THE OLD MISSOURI HOME.

Story of the Most Noted Bandits of the Nineteenth Century—After the War the Youngers Wished to Stay at Home—Old Passions Drove Them to Outlawry.

Coleman Younger was born in Jackson county, Jan. 15, 1844. He is therefore 59 years old. His father was Henry Washington Younger, who moved from Kentucky to Missouri in 1830 married in this county Miss Beesheba Friscoe. They had 14 children eight of them daughters, says the Kansas City Star.

The father of Cole Younger was a thrifty man and a good citizen. He was three times elected to the Missouri legislature and was for eight years judge of the Jackson county court. He owned a farm of 600 acres in Jackson county and another large farm near Harrisonville, Cass county. He moved to that farm in 1858 and began stock-raising and trading. When the civil war broke out he had, besides these two farms, a livery stable and two stores in Harrisonville. His wealth was estimated then to be $100,000, a very large fortune for a man in those days. His children were well educated and well reared.

The war ruined the Younger family financially and ruined part of it morally. The father was a union sympathizer, but the Kansas Jayhawkers and Red Legs robbed him of all his live-stock and finally assassinated him near Independence. He was riding in a buggy from Independence and when five miles out he was set upon and killed and $406 was taken from his body.

It was this act which drove the Younger brothers to enlist under the black flag of Quantrell. Coleman Younger joined that band Jan. 1, 1862. His first fight was one night when the band was at the home of John Flannery near Kansas City. A body of federal soldiers surrounded the house and demanded surrender. Quantrell promised an answer in ten minutes. This gave him time to arrange his men inside the house and to pour a murderous volley of buckshot into the soldiers. The fight lasted two hours. Then the federals set the house afire. The guerillas rushed from the burning building into the faces of the soldiers, each firing his gun. All escaped. Cole Younger became separated from his comrades and was chased by 12 cavalrymen, whom he fought off single handed.

After the fight Cole Younger stopped two days at the home of Jerry Blythe. The federals went there after him, but he was gone. For revenge they killed a little son of Mr. Blythe. In revenge for this Cole Younger got together a band of Quantrell's men and stationed them on the banks of the Blue cut, and as the 75 federal soldiers fled through it every man of them was shot and killed.

For these things the bands from Kansas and federal soldiers began a series of reprisals, and it is told by the Youngers that their own mother was compelled to set fire to their own house in the dead of winter and that three of their sisters were murdered.

In September of 1866, 18 months after the close of the war, all the Younger boys were back upon the old homestead near Harrisonville mending fences, putting up barns and getting ready for farming. At this point historical account disagree.

The Youngers say they wished peace. Others say they had such a baptism of blood and fierce adventure that it was impossible for them to follow the pursuits of peace and that they joined with Jesse and Frank

James and others of the Quantrell crowd and formed that band of desperate bandits which spread terror over this part of the West for many years. In just how many bank robberies, train robberies and highway robberies "Cole" Younger took part will never be known, but his name has been connected with many of them. He was the coolest and shrewdest of all that outlaw band.

In all the wanderings of the Younger brothers in the 16 years between the close of the war and the bank robbery at Northfield, Minn., which proved their undoing, the old home and haunts in Jackson county held strong attractions for them, and often they returned here. The curse of the outlaw and the wanderer was upon them, but through all this country they had many friends who would rather die than betray them. The love of home was as strong within them as the same instinct in the breast of the homing pigeon and 25 years' imprisonment never deadened it.

It was the middle of August, 1876, that "Cole" Younger and his two brothers rode out from Lee's summit to join Frank and Jesse James and the others for the long ride to Northfield. This was "Cole" Younger's last expedition. "Jim" and "Bob" never saw the old home again. "Bob" died in prison. "Jim" killed himself last summer. Both are buried in the graveyard near Lee's Summit. "Cole" Younger will be the only one of the trio to look upon the scenes of his youth.

FAVOR LITTLEFIELD BILL.

Majority of Senate Committee Wants Drastic Anti-Trust Law.

Washington, Feb. 13.—The position of the judiciary committee of the senate in regard to trust legislation is agitating those leaders who declared that there would be no trust legislation save the Elkins interstate commerce bill and the Nelson amendment. The judiciary committee is favorably disposed to the Littlefield bill or something equally effective, and what is more surprising is that four or five republican senators are among those who say that something ought to be done.

Hoar of Massachusetts, Nelson of Minnesota, McComas of Maryland, Simon of Oregon and Clark of Wyoming are said to be the republican senators that cannot agree with the men who have compromised nothing but "mill" trust legislation. Reliance is now placed upon some of the democratic senators to prevent anything from being done. Among those who are mentioned as looking at the subject from a conservative point of view are Pettus of Alabama, Turner of Washington and Blackburn of Kentucky.

While it is not known definitely how any of these men stand, it is claimed that some of the constitutional questions involved have caused the democratic senators who are known as strict constructionists to view, with some alarm provisions in the Hoar bill. Of course, no vote has been taken, and it is only from rumors that the alleged position of senators on the committee can be learned. There is an intimation that the Littlefield bill, if it is reported, will cause a great deal of discussion in the senate before it is allowed to pass.

Will Meet General Booth.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 12.—Senator Hanna is to be the host at a dinner to be given at the Arlington tonight in honor of General William Booth, founder and head of the Salvation Army.
