LINCOLN PROMISED

TOLD THE LORD HE WOULD EMANCIPATE SLAVES.

Therefore When the Rebels were Driven Back into Virginia He Signed the Proclamation Freeing the Negroes—Lincoln's Patriotism of the Highest Type.

General Eli Torrence, of Minneapolis, national commander of the G. A. R., in a recent address on Lincoln, said:

"In 1858 it was the courageous heart of Lincoln, like one crying in the wilderness, boldly declaring unless slavery was wrong, nothing was wrong. That every man was entitled to the fruits of his own labor, and that no man could justly live in idle luxury by the sweat of another's brow. He foresaw with clearest vision that the conflict between freedom and slavery was inevitable, and that one or the other must prevail. He did not believe that the government could endure permanently half-slave and half-free, but never for a moment did he lose faith in the final triumph of the right.

Man of the People.

"What a priceless inheritance to this nation that he belonged to the common people, that he dwelt among us, that the schools did not educate and polish him until he was separated from us, that he was as accessible in the white house as in the cabin."

Speaking of Lincoln's religious devotion, Gen. Torrence said:

"He had a devout heart. As he left his old home for Washington he said to his neighbors: 'I go to a greater task than that assigned to Washington, and unless the God that helped him helps me I shall fail, but guided and sustained by Him, I shall not fail; I shall succeed. When he was about to issue his emancipation proclamation he said to Seward, in reply to his great secretary, who doubted that the time had fully come for such an important step: 'I must sign it; I told the Lord I would.' Seward, somewhat startled, said: 'What is that you say, Mr. President?' And he replied: 'I say that I told the Lord that if he would drive the rebels back into Virginia I would emancipate the slaves, and I will do it.' He had a living faith in God and a faith strong enough to lift the people up with him. True patriotism and true religion cannot be divorced, and until they secure unquestioned obedience to rightful authority, human and divine."

A Typical President.

Of the patriotism of Lincoln, the general said:

"He was a patriot of the highest and noblest type. He knew no North, no South, no East, no West. The rivers and mountains did not divide this country, but bound all parts of it together. He believed in the perpetuity of the republic. His great heart never expressed a more sublime faith in that perpetuity or uttered a grander prophecy than when standing under the impenetrable clouds of impending war he assured his countrymen that the time would come when the mystic cords of memory stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land would yet swell the chorus of the nation when touched again as surely they would be by the better angels of our natures. These immortal words were spoken when he was being bitterly assailed and when the passions of men were like the angry sea and their hearts were filled with prejudice and hate."

J. H. GWINN HOME

FINDS IDAHO SHEEP IN GOOD CONDITION.

Says Prospects are Favorable for Raise in Price of Wool—Thinks a January Lambing Season would Pay Oregonians.

J. H. Gwinn, secretary of the State Woolgrowers' Association of Oregon, returned Saturday evening from an extended visit to Boise City, Sumpter, Baker City and intervening points in Eastern Oregon and Idaho.

Mr. Gwinn is highly pleased with the stock conditions that exist throughout the territory he has visited. While the feeding weather of the past winter has been very soft in most localities, sheep are in fair condition and the losses have been nominal.

He finds that the reports of heavy losses on the ranges of Idaho are untrue. The storms that swept over Wyoming the past 10 days did not reach the Idaho ranges.

Owing to the prevalence of much rainy weather, during which sheep would not eat hay readily, he finds that an unavoidable shrinkage in the flocks will probably reduce the wool clip to some extent.

However, the flocks are all in good condition to begin the lambing season, and he fully anticipates a raise in the price of wool over last year, of from 1/2 to 1 1/2 cents per pound. Owing to this prospect of raise, no wool has yet been contracted.

Idaho is well organized, her sheepmen having long ago recognized the benefits of a union of efforts.

The two-mile range limit law of Idaho has been taken into the supreme court, and a hearing will be had in the near future. The sheepmen feel confident that it will be declared non-effective. The decision in the California case heard at San Francisco, in which it was held that the state has no jurisdiction over the public domain has given the Idaho people new hope.

Mr. Gwinn is of the opinion that the Idaho law indirectly injured the sheep industry of Oregon. Idaho sheepmen were compelled to sell down their herds to the narrowest margin possible on account of the operation of this law. This great rush of Idaho sheep into the markets lowered the prices and forced Oregon sheepmen to take from 50 cents to 80 cents per head less than their stock was worth, under normal conditions.

One innovation in sheep raising which Mr. Gwinn thinks is surely coming to Oregon, is the January lambing season. In many places in Idaho, flocks have been lambing in the month of January, in well protected sheds.

These January lambs, by good care, can be placed upon the market by May 20, and last year several carloads of this class of lambs sold in the Chicago markets at $7.65 per head and weighed 70 pounds each.

As the ranges narrow down and the herds decrease, sheepmen in Oregon will be forced to this new departure. Smaller herds will be better bred, better protected and a higher rate of interest will be realized on the sheep man's investment.

Mr. Gwinn finds the demand for thoroughbreds more urgent than ever this year, and is pleased to see a tendency to improve the herds, constantly growing.

While absent, he visited Sumpter and is enthusiastic over the bright business prospects ahead of that thriving camp and city. Men of capital are now going into Sumpter to stay. The boom period is past, and the growth, he thinks, will be phenomenal from now on.

PATRIOTIC PROGRAM

HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS COMMEMORATE WASHINGTON DAY.

Appropriate Songs and Recitations Given—A Cantata Entitled "Washington Guards," the Leading Feature.

Saturday evening in the high school assembly hall, a patriotic program was rendered by the students, commencing with the national anthem, followed by the national songs were sung with such enthusiasm that they inspired the soul of every one present with a new zeal for patriotism.

The recitations were given with much feeling, showing that the readers were in full sympathy with their words. The dialogue by little Lena Cameron and George Edwards, taking the parts of Martha and George Washington respectively was fine. The "tea party" with Bessie Marsh, Florence Adams, George Wilkinson, and Willie Hoskins as the participants, was well carried out.

The cantata entitled "The Washington Guards" and "Ladies of Honor" was the leading feature of the evening. The drill of the guards was fine. Fred Hartman, as George Washington, again did himself proud. The "Ladies of Honor" were especially pretty in their colonial dress, and their part in the cantata was well sustained.

Ahlma Hallock was to have been Martha Washington, but on account of illness was obliged to give up at the 11th hour, but Lenore Sheridan came bravely forward and with two hours' notice mastered the part and carried it well and successfully. She is deserving of much praise.

The people of the town responded heartily to the invitation to the exercises. The high school wishes to thank them. The little admission charged was to defray expenses, but on account of the large turnout, enough funds remain to buy a new dictionary.

A LIQUID AIR CLUB

UNIQUE SOCIAL ORGANIZATION IS LAUNCHED.

All Members Are Office-holders—Full Quota of Officers Elected—As Membership Increases New Offices Will Be Created.

An organization was effected a few evenings since at the home of Perry Houser, which was christened the Liquid Air Club. Its purposes are strictly fellowship and not scientific, as might be inferred from the name. The membership of the club can be ascertained from the officering of it and its auxiliary, the Red Cross Society. The purpose of the latter organization is to care for the dead and wounded of the first named organization.

All the members of both organizations hold office, and if the membership is ever increased the purpose is that the corps of officers shall be increased so that the unwritten law of the two orders shall not be violated, that no member of either order shall ever be out of office.

The officers of the Liquid Air Club are as follows: President, Arthur Siebert; secretary, J. T. Hinkle; treasurer, D. B. Bailey; first vice-president, Perry Houser; second vice-president, Dr. W. J. Keys.

The officers of the Red Cross are as follows: President, Mrs. W. J. Keys; secretary, Mrs. J. T. Hinkle; treasurer, Mrs. Perry Houser; first vice-president, Mrs. D. B. Bailey; second vice-president, Mrs. Arthur Siebert.

Meetings of the two organizations will be held every week, with perfect irregularity. No member of the club is ever to be notified of the coming of the remainder.

This is understood to be a wise provision born of thoughtful unselfishness, to secure for the hostess immunity from the worry, anxiety and work necessary in making preparation for guests.
