

FASHIONS'S PHASES

STYLES ARE BECOMING MUCH MORE SETTLED.

All About the Newest Designs in Hats—Most Difficult Fashions to Follow by Amateurs—Something Concerning the New Shirt Waists.

New York, Feb. 28.—One might write a volume on springhats without exhausting the subject or even devoting a chapter to the fashionable shirt waist with which the hat is inseparably associated.

Styles, as far as the headgear is concerned, are becoming more settled and though there are myriad novelties displayed in the shops, the approved spring hat is dangerously like the trying winter designs in general outline. There is the crownless affair, if anything more flattened out than ever and showing the brim bent closer to the hair at the back.

This shape, however, presents an opportunity for an infinite variety of decoration at the sides under the brim, for it is impossible to mass any trimming at the back and any ornamentation at the top must be limited to a flat rosette or bunch of flowers.

Plumes and Flowers.

Ostrich plumes nestled under the brim to rest softly against the hair, are delightful for softening decided lines and lend charm to the face. For this reason there is a formidable struggle for supremacy on between the plume and the flower. The greatest drawback of the feather lies in its readiness to droop when exposed to dampness and its almost constant need of recurling which is inconvenient, if not expensive. On the other hand the flower, no matter how expensive or exquisitely colored, easily succumbs to the withering rays of old Sol or saline effects of ocean breezes. The desire, however, to reproduce the beauties of Nature as subtly as possible, gives the flower a point ahead in the game.

But the woman of fashion devotes no time to the discussion of the pros and cons of the subject. With 15 or 20 hats at her disposal she can afford to change often enough to avoid the ravages wrought by climatic conditions and the less fortunate sister who cannot follow suit, must be content to duplicate two or three of her neighbors' best models in less expensive materials, for hats, like gowns, are more of a luxury than ever this season.

Need of Artist.

Women who in the past trimmed and even made their own hats, best appreciate the difficulties of the present fashions in millinery. So subtle are the curvings and upturning of brims and so deft the arrangement of trimmings that only one to the manner trained may hope to achieve success in the art. Better a smart shape and the simplest trimming adjusted by a master hand than an elaborate creation bunglingly handled these days.

White, cream and biscuit color chiffon hats are exceedingly smart for dress wear. One in the last named tint and of the expansive variety is especially pretty. Under the brim there is a geranium red velvet band just wide enough to make the hat set comfortably on the head. This, however, is hidden by a wreath of silk and velvet geraniums varying in tint from dark crimson to pale rose. Resting lightly on the top of the hat is a rosette of changeable lousine comprising the shades of the flowers with a suggestion of dark blue. The hat completes an afternoon gown of red and tan foulard.

Turban Straw Hats.

Another fetching hat, worn with a costume of pale champagne tint, is of Tuscan straw trimmed with vivid rose hues in flowers and velvet. The shape is somewhat eccentric, having a narrow crown over which spreads a brim so compressed that the edge is almost shap. The flowers are wreathed around the edge of the brim and the ribbon laid loosely in the space between with only a glimpse here and there to heighten the ensemble.

A simple frock of grey can be completed with a chapeau of feathery green ferns, whether it be for a woman of 50 or a girl of 18. Ferns give a hat a light airy finish that reminds one of dark woods and babbling brooks and such trimmings are acceptable because they are near to Nature's heart. Though it cannot be said that the fashionable world is awakening from its "long winter sleep," anything that suggests spring is hailed with delight. Hyacinth hats are displayed in some of the exclusive Fifth Avenue establishments and admired by men as well as women. The lilac effects are most sought, for blue-purple tints always set in with strenuous vogue about this time and spring would seem incomplete without them. A model which has all the appearances of an imported design has the crown composed entirely of lilac hyacinths. The wide brim is of soft folds of purple taffeta, somewhat frayed out and made to resemble rough straw as much as possible. The shape rests off the hair at the back—a distinguishing feature—and here a wide gold buckle is employed from which there is a slight fall of yellow lace.

Ready to Wear Hats.

The ready-to-wear hats are noteworthy because of their dressiness. There is nothing about them that will grow dowdy looking after the first few weeks' wear. The shapes are smart, following closely upon those of more expensive models, but in less perishable straws and the trimming though simple and sparsely applied, is elegant. A sensible feature about these hats is that the straws are fancy enough in themselves to require but little extra decoration.

White and tan are employed for fine straws. In the coarser effect there is often a combination of colors, white and brown, dull blue and green, red and tan, etc., comprising ultra-smart schemes. A quill or a rosette of taffeta or satin ribbon, is all that is used for a trimming. Sometimes both are used, but as most of the quills are highly finished, it is no longer necessary to conceal unsightly ends beneath the protecting rosette or chou.

Pretty Shirt Waists.

It is repeating an old story to say that shirt waists were never prettier than this year, but such is actually the case. Plain waists of pure Irish linen are prophesied by arbiters of fashion to be smartest, but there are many exquisite designs in other fabrics. A waist that will attract attention anywhere is made of silk pongee with a fine tucked yoke trimmed down the center with a two-inch band, shoulder bands, cuffs and stock with pieces of pongee, piped with scarlet plaid taffeta.

A model which will be liked because of its youthful effect is made of old-fashioned linen and has long shoulder straps extending over the sleeves in a point and forming a part of an artistic looking yoke, which is all one piece. It has a sheath sleeve which opens over a slightly gathered puff, finished with a writband.

Among the heavy wash materials, mercerized Madras is a favorite. A pretty waist in delicate mauve was seen a few days ago on a dummy in a spring walking costume. White polka dots were scattered over the surface of the Madras. A wide double-breasted front piece was ornamented with two rows of large pearl buttons. No other trimming appeared on the waist, which was made up with wide tucks running down from the shoulder seams, both front and back.

Fancy organdie waists are lined with silk and trimmed with real Valenciennes and appliques of the "fruit laces." These will be worn with graceful skirts of shirred or tucked organdie.
