LOST IN LAVA BEDS

L. B. RINEHART TELLS AN INTERESTING PIONEER STORY.

Pack Mules Stolen by Piutes—Followed to the Lava Beds, Where Packers' Horses Died and Were Eaten—Great Suffering by His Men.

Paul DeLaney, who was connected with the editorial department of the East Oregonian for several months last year, writes the following interesting story for the Oregon Daily Journal:

L. B. Rinehart, of Union, Oregon, is one of the oldest pioneers of Oregon and still remembers many of the incidents of early days. One of the most impressive to his memory was an Indian raid upon a packer's train in which he was interested, whereby he lost all of his earthly possessions in one night.

It was while old Umatilla Landing was the main supply point for all of the interior country, and at a time when the Indians were raiding the Eastern Oregon belt from the California to the Idaho lines. Mr. Rinehart with his packing train, consisting of 10 men and 30 mules was making the return trip from Boise City, at that time an army post, and had reached a point on the Snake river between where Huntington, Oregon, and Weiser, Idaho, now stand. The packers had camped for the night, and the mules were hopped and turned loose in a little valley near the camp. The river, which circled the camp on the north, prevented the animals from straying far away on that side, and a mountain covered with large boulders lay to the south. The men, tired out with the day's travel through the dust and heat, had gone to bed early, oblivious of the fact that many eyes were watching them from behind the boulders above.

A Night Raid.

As soon as quiet prevailed in camp in the early part of the night, a band of Piute Indians stole down from the rocks, unhopped the mules and drove them out through a gulch on to the level plain lying to the south. The fact that the bell on the "bell mule" ceased to ring excited the curiosity of some of the men who remained awake and these went out to investigate. They found that the Indians were in possession of the mules and were leisurely driving them away, but the whole country seemed to be

READ ALL OF THIS.

You Never Know the Moment When This Information May Prove of Infinite Value.

It is worth considerable to any reader to know the value of and use of a medicine, for if there is no occasion to employ it in the meantime, trial humanity is subject to many influences and unforeseen contingencies that the wisest are totally unable to gauge the future. Know, then, that Doan's Ointment will cure any case of Hemorrhoids, commonly known as piles, or any disease of the cuticle or skin, generally termed eczema. One application convinces—continuation cures. Read the proof:

T. H. Thomas, attorney, of 500 East Bennett avenue, Cripple Creek, says: "I just as emphatically endorse Doan's Ointment today as I did in the month of June, 1899. At that time I went to the drug store for a box which I used for itching hemorrhoids. A few applications gave wonderful relief, and a short continuation of the treatment cured me. There have been symptoms of a recurrence since, but a few applications of the remedy never fail to bring positive relief. My opinion of Doan's Ointment, then expressed, is the same today as it was when it was first brought to my notice."

swarming with them, and the packers did not care to attack many times their number, especially when the Indians might be lying in ambush.

A Foolhardy Four.

The next morning found the 10 men afoot many miles from any human habitation. They still had their saddles and provisions, and a few of them were armed, but a trip on foot to Umatilla Landing, more than 100 miles away, and the Blue mountains to cross on the way, did not look encouraging. Fortunately, another pack train had arrived later the same night from Umatilla Landing, had struck camp farther down the river, and had not been seen by the Indians. They not only had supplies of arms, but had a few surplus horses. They at once agreed to take the stranded party back with them to Boise City. But four of the Rinehart party declared they would follow the Indians and recover the stolen mules. In spite of the argument against the trip on the part of their friends they prepared for the pursuit. Mounted and well provisioned, and armed to the teeth, they took an oath that they would overtake those Indians or leave their own bodies on the desert.

An appeal was made to the commander of the military forces at Boise City to send a detachment of soldiers in search of the men. This request was granted, and a well-provisioned detachment was despatched to the point on Snake river where the packers' mules were stolen, with orders to strike the trail and follow it until the men were found or the cause of their delay discovered.

In the Lava Beds.

The soldiers followed the trail until it reached the lava beds. The packers had followed it also to this point, but here all evidence of the trail of both parties disappeared. Not even the shod horses of the packers made any indentation upon those glazed and flinty, fire-baked obstacles which occupied every inch of the surface of the earth for miles in every direction. The lava beds lie in broken order. At one point they rise up many feet, forming little basins of less than an acre. When once out in these lava beds the country all looks alike. It looks like a sea of waves and swells. The sameness of the surface of the earth and the absence of any trail or continuous hill or valley makes it necessary to travel by course entirely. It was in a place like this that Captain Jack and 35 warriors stood 1000 soldiers at bay and killed many of them, while his men did not receive a scratch.

A Pitiful Story.

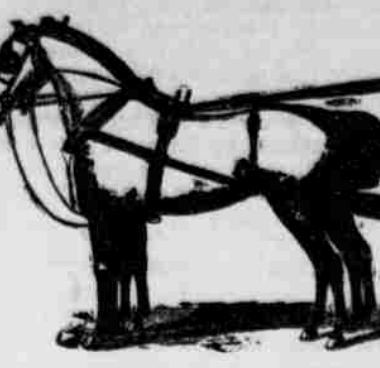

The four packers had followed the Indians at a safe distance, watching night and day for an opportunity to make a raid on the mules, hoping thus to leave the Indians afoot on the desert. But the watchfulness of the red men had been such that the opportunity was not presented. When they reached the lava beds they thought of turning back, but one more daring than the others chided them, reminding them of their oath. They followed on, but soon lost sight of the Indians and became lost to themselves. Their horses' feet were cut by the lava rocks until they were unable to travel and had to be abandoned one by one and killed. Their provisions had run out and they had been sustained for weeks on the flesh of their slain animals. Then they attempted to attract the attention of the Indians that they might surrender themselves to them, but were unable to do so, though they discharged their guns and built signal fires of the sagebrush.

They had worn out their shoes and had used up all of the blankets to wrap their feet, which were being cut to pieces by the sharp corners of the lava rocks.

Finally, when all hope looked as if it had passed, they laid themselves down among the rocks to die. By mere accident the soldiers came upon them. They all returned to Boise City, but Mr. Rinehart says that none of them ever had any desire to follow an Indian trail afterwards.
