The chief value of legislation today lies in the opportunity and power to remedy mistakes of the past. "Repeal is more blessed than enactment."—Henry Loomis Nelson.

GIVE THE OFFICER CREDIT.

Many Oregon newspapers are publishing an editorial taken from the Salt Lake Herald, entitled "Newspapers and Criminals." The article does great credit to the Herald, and to newspapers in general, but there is one phase of the subject which it overlooks.

It gives the newspaper all the glory for running down, advertising, shadowing and bringing criminals to justice. It lays all the credit for seeking out and unearthing swindling schemes at the door of newspapers, when the officers of the law, including the police and county officers, are entitled to their just share.

Let a crooked man come into town and before he has made a dozen moves toward the accomplishment of his evil purpose, he is spotted by the watchful eye of the official.

His movements are shadowed, his acts are weighed, his associates located, his victims are hunted out and his plans are followed with tireless persistence.

If the newspaper gets information on the subject, before the crime is committed and the swindler flies, nine times out of ten it is secured from the officer.

Newspapers are not detectives. They can herald the crime and the description of the criminal, over the country, but they cannot prevent the commission of crime. Neither can they act in the capacity of inquisitor. Men have a right to come and go in the community and no newspaper can say that every stranger must be suspected until he proves to be straight.

The official can act in this capacity. He can determine the status of the man whose occupation is not above suspicion and can warn the press, which warns the public.

Newspapers help catch criminals. They turn the searchlight of publicity on the fugitive, but in the work of preventing crime in the community, the officials, by their inquisitorial watchfulness, warn the public of the presence of the criminal.

The official and the press, working together, have made escape of the wrong-doer well nigh impossible.

THE PATRIOT'S BOAST.

Oregon, with all thy faults, the homeseeker and the native, loves thee still!

Nebraska blizzards are shrieking at the heels of the westbound emigrant trains; Ohio floods are rising like an incubus, over the smiling homes of the Central states; Texan "northers" are sweeping bare of herds, the great upland plains of the Lone Star empire, and the Kansas storms are sporting with the budding orchards and growing wheat—while the Inland Empire, Oregon especially, is jogging along the shady lane of springtime, plowing for spring crops, shearing her flocks and listening to the chiming chorus of hammers and anvils.

The stories of the homeseekers are all agreed on one point, and that is this: The first joyous touch of spring sunshine on the entire trip from Omaha to Oregon, is felt when the tourist passes through the open gate of the West, at the pass of the Blue Mountains, and starts down the smiling slopes covered with growing wheat and budding trees.

The Inland Empire has a three weeks' earlier spring and three weeks' later fall than the country from which the homeseekers are coming.

Is it any wonder they pay the fabulous prices for Oregon real estate? Is it any wonder they cheerfully begin the transformation of a claim in the foothills to the productive alfalfa farm, in the hope of such returns as come from a life of industry and economy in the West?

No wonder the crowded cities of the East are giving up their best men and women, to become homesteaders in the arid states. The returns from the venture justify it tenfold.

SPOKANE'S PROGRESS.

One of the most convincing evidences of municipal health and strength which has been shown by Spokane, is the new charter, as revised by the charter committee of the city council.

The new charter raises the price of saloon licenses from $500 to $1000, and places the mayor and chief of police in control of the police department.

The raise in price of licenses will insure to Spokane an orderly, clean lot of saloons, as $1000 is more than the common joint can afford to pay and will result in better order, as the man who stakes his money and reputation in the liquor business, under this high license will be interested in keeping an orderly house, which will draw custom and pay interest on the investment.

The appointment of the chief of police by the mayor and council is evidence that Spokane is following the inevitable metropolitan rule. There is need of a check on all municipal offices in order to secure the highest efficiency.

The Walla Walla Statesman complains of the telephone fiend who spends the evening listening to the conversations of his neighbors, and the Oregonian is shocked at the camera and kodak which expose the privacy of the home, to the public's gaze. Between these two evils, the sanctity of private life is being battered down. Civilization, by creating new devices for comfort and convenience, is destroying the privacy of the home, to an alarming extent.

After waiting half a century, the veterans of the Oregon Indian wars of 1855-6, are to receive a portion of their pay, due from the struggling territory of Oregon. While the entire country west of the Mississippi was fighting Indians and blazing new trails of conquest at that time, these volunteers who gave a special service to their country and were rewarded by recognition from the territory they defended, are deserving of this act of justice from the legislature.

The Salt Lake valley was a more unpromising wilderness, when the Mormons came there, than any section of arid country now to be found in the West. Labor, economy, irrigation and perseverance will convert Eastern Oregon's desert into a country of equal beauty and productiveness.

Avery C. Moore, the member of the Idaho legislature, who championed the eight-hour law, is a young man of 30. He is a workingman; by occupation and sentiment, having won his way from the position of a miner and locomotive engineer to that of Idaho commissioner of the Charleston exposition and later member of the house of representatives.

CIVIC MORALS IN THE EAST.

The following article is an extract from a paper read by Mrs. Imogene B. Oakley, of Philadelphia, before the National Civil Service Reform League reported in the Woman's Journal:

"In the New York public schools it is the custom to test the ability of the primary classes in English composition by writing part of a story upon the blackboard, and then requiring the class to complete it in their own language and according to their own individual ideas. Recently a teacher in one of the East Side schools wrote upon the blackboard this little narrative:

"A poor little girl was once selling apples at a railway station. A train came in, and several of the passengers bought fruit from her, and then went back to their seats. Just before the train started another man came to the steps and asked her how much she charged for her apples. 'Three for ten cents, sir,' she answered. 'Then give me three,' he said, and took the apples; but before he had paid for them, the train began to pull out.

"The man thought he would save the ten cents by not paying for the apples, so he went back into the car, leaving the little girl crying on the platform. But the mayor of the town was sitting in the next seat, and had watched the whole incident.

"Now," said the teacher, 'what did the mayor do?'

"One little girl, who had grown up on the East Side, and had unconsciously marked the ways of some city officials—and had she lived in Philadelphia her experience would have been the same—continued the story thus:

"Then the mayor was glad because he had seen it all, and could make the man give him half the ten cents."

THE HAPPY OTHER FELLOW.

A clown looked at a king and sighed: "Oh that just for a day I might sit where he sits, so proud, To dazzle and to awe the crowd, With ne'er a bitter tear to hide While seeming to be gay!"

The king looked down upon the clown And thought: "Ah, happy wight! You gaily caper all the day, Ne'er burdened by the sorrows they in secret bear who have to wear The purple on the height."

—S. E. Kiser, in Record-Herald.

Many women and doctors do not recognize the real symptoms of derangement of the female organs until too late.

"I had terrible pains along my spinal cord for two years and suffered dreadfully. I was given different medicines, wore plasters; none of these things helped me. Reading of the cures that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought about, I somehow felt that it was what I needed and bought a bottle to take. How glad I am that I did so; two bottles brought me immense relief, and after using three bottles more I felt new life and blood surging through my veins. It seemed as though there had been a regular house cleaning through my system, that all the sickness and poison had been taken out and new life given me instead. I have advised dozens of my friends to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to complete happiness, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has secured this to me."
