MISS MAY MARKELL,

A Society Belle of London, Canada.

MISS MAY MARKELL, of London, Ontario, Canada, is a beautiful woman who knows what she wants. She has found her health and happiness in the use of Wine of Cardui. She writes: "I had suffered for years with terrible bearing-down pains during my menstrual period. I could not walk any feet and was never able to do any work. Wine of Cardui was the only thing that could depend on to do me good. I tried several with no success. Cardui cured me and I have perfect health for two years. Give you all the credit for I owe it."

flow in a healthy and natural manner. Menstruation started right is very easy to keep regular through the years of mature womanhood. Thus the "change of life" need not be feared. Thus Wine of Cardui is woman's best relief from youth to old age. A million women have secured blessed relief from their sufferings by taking this treatment. It relieves menstrual troubles in an incredibly short time. In a simple case of deranged menses Wine of Cardui never fails. To relieve disordered menses is to remove the cause of other female troubles. Any physician will tell you that to remove the cause of a disease renders the cure easy, in fact seldom fails to complete the cure. If you would have the same relief which Miss Markell secured try Wine of Cardui. You can take it without an examination and without any publicity whatever. You can take it in the privacy of your home and secure just as much benefit as if a doctor had prescribed it for you. Thousands of women are feeling the vigor of returning health by taking Wine of Cardui.

WEEKLY FASHION LETTER.

New York, March 7.—Years ago, when grandmother was young, it was considered an imposition on the weather to doff wraps and wear straw hats in March. But things have changed, and although this is only the first week of the first spring month, it is impossible to see a woman of fashion wearing a cloth hat of any kind. The winter coat also has been laid aside and its place usurped by a smart little jacket of blouse which accompanies the spring tailor-made suit.

A sartorial luxury which is becoming more and more necessary is the extra skirt for the tailor suit. This is a sort of emergency affair, reserved for rainy days or occasions on which the walking skirt would be more apropos. The principal skirt, however, is designed to meet all requirements of a beautiful day, with demitrain and decoration in proportion.

Cheviots, zibelines and tweeds find expression in some very stunning gowns. A design in dark brown zebeline lightly flecked with white and emerald green and here and there a touch of copper is especially attractive. The skirt has a graduated flounce of box plaits and the fitting coat bodice is made with a basque, the neck—for there is no collar—outlined with Beauvais embroidery, tipped with silk dangles to match the facings of the fronts and over the shoulders are epaulettes of a new tinted lace.

Lace, by the way, grows coarser and heavier with each new design. There is no harm in saying that the latest novelties look like twine, which has been knitted with large needles in fantastic pattern and finished with long knotted fringe, for one has only to prize them to see that there is nothing cheap about them at all. The prices vary anywhere from $2.98 to $10 a yard and they have not the advantage of the appliques, which can be taken apart, as it were, and arranged over a skirt or bodice to suit the individual taste.

At the dressmakers' convention, which is now in session, it is a problem to tell the gowns on exhibition from those worn by the exhibitors or rather it would be impossible, except for the animation of the competitors. One smart little woman, whose gowns have attracted attention from the beginning, appeared at the opening session in a suit of blue and white fancifully checked tweed, the skirt fitting by means of crosswise tucks and tapering down from the waist and upward from the hem are graduated darts of old blue velvet, terminating in small discs. The blue is a modification of the Mousquetaire blue with a tint that Dumas would probably describe as that of the dregs of old wine. The short coat bodice is inset with velvet to match and the fronts lined with white, are embroidered in gold and blue and bordered with a pretty blue and green spotted ribbon.

Frogs, tassels and all sorts of dangles are used upon gowns for both street and house wear. And, strange to say, despite the elaborate use of heavy silk cords on bodices, there is nothing of a masculine or military appearance about these designs. Wherever there is the slightest tendency toward masculinity, it is immediately softened by a touch of chiffon or lace, or both, if the case requires it.

A pretty princess gown of putty colored ladies' cloth has a bolero composed of silk gimpure, very short and fastening at the side, for it is continued in the front in a long panel which widens out toward the hem of the skirt and suggests something entirely novel and original. The yoke is of ivory lace over chiffon and has a choux of putty colored panne on one side of it. Princess effects are always pretty if worn by tall, svelte figures, but the trouble is that people with wrong figures invariably go in for these things first and consequently create quite an unjust feeling against them and prejudice spreads. When well worn, however, nothing is more graceful and there is no doubt that many will be seen during the spring.

Everything seems to point to the fact that the soft lily-leaf shades which were worn so much as a trimming last year and proved so effective when employed in conjunction with ivory cloth gowns, will be seen again in the same relation, and as they are the ne plus ultra for supplementary adornment of this kind it is very good wearing, while Brandenburs, pampilles and all such fashionable accessories promise to follow us through the spring and summer.

It looks as if the leather belt would not be in such great demand this season. Tailor-made gowns that have any belts at all have them made of the same material as the gown or in silk or panne of the same shade.

The objection raised against the leather belt is that it can not be embroidered and otherwise adorned like the cloth girdle and for this reason does not meet the requirements of dame fashion. While this is true of most leathers, it is not so with suede, for surely there is nothing more fashionable than this, though it is always expensive.

Belts and stock that correspond are pretty and new. If the collar is of clerical design the belt carries out the same idea with the exception that the tabs hang down the back. There are styles in which this scheme is reversed, but there is always the similarity between stock and belt.

Ribbons which hold a leading place among the details of dress are by no means the lightest of the expenses of a woman's wardrobe. An ample supply of light shades of taffeta, Louise, liberty, gauze and moire ribbons are on exhibition for the decoration of the well-dressed girl. Keeping ribbons in such a way that they are insured against dust and the tossing about that they frequently get in a

Confide in a Woman

Women may write about their ills to Mrs. Pinkham, and avoid the questioning of a male physician. They can tell their story without reservation to her; she never breaks a confidence, and her advice is the best in the world.

The questions asked of a woman by a male physician are embarrassing, and often revolting to a sensitive nature. In consequence the whole truth is not told; this makes it difficult for female troubles to be successfully treated even by the best physicians, and is the reason so many women grow worse rather than better. A woman understands a woman better than a man, — there are symptoms which sick women have that a man cannot understand, simply because he is a man, but the whole truth may be told to Mrs. Pinkham, and her vast experience enables her to give advice which leads to a cure.

All women who suffer should secure Mrs. Pinkham's advice; it costs nothing but a letter addressed to her at Lynn, Mass. Female troubles are real troubles, and must be treated understandingly. For a quarter of a century Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have been helping women to get strong and well, and her great file of letters prove that more than a million women have been restored to health and strength by her advice and her medicine when all other means have failed.

When you go to a druggist for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, do not let him persuade you to try something which he says is just as good; there is nothing just as good, because Mrs. Pinkham's medicine holds the record for the largest number of cures of any female medicine in the world.
