'Lovers' Lane," which will be seen at the Frazer on Tuesday, March 17, is of the customary order of bucolic play, William A. Brady, says that it action does not take place in a large city. "There is an intermediate ground," says Mr. Brady. tween the cobble stones and the hay fields, and our desire is to impress that "Lovers' Lane" is a story of small town life. Its hero is a minister. There is no place in the world where there is so much friction and intolerance, and where discord can generate so quickly as in the congregation of the village church, when once the first gun is fired. No one realizes this more than Clyde Fitch, the author of the play, and it is with such a condition that he deals with his
