WEEKLY FASHION LETTER.

New York, March 28.—Tan in all the fabrics of light weight enjoys unprecedented favor this season. It is by no means the leading shade for first place is unanimously awarded to grey, but it affords an effective change in the fashionable wardrobe which demands variety almost above everything else.

The popular tendency is still bent toward color combinations, but exclusive modistes are quietly asserting the greater elegance of single color effects. Whatever difference there is in the tone of a smart frock is obtained by a trimming in a lighter or darker shade of the same color, but a distinctly varying tone is not in vogue.

Tan Silk Voile.

A very dressy afternoon gown in tan silk voile has the skirt laid in transverse tucks running from the hem to the waistline. The tucks do not cross the front breadth which is perfectly plain except for three chirings below the belt.

The bodice has a vest of chiffon, which broadens above the bust to extend in one piece with the collar and shoulder seams. Bordered the vest are embroidered bands of tan taffeta. The sleeves are shirred at the top, several rows deep, while the fulness below the elbow is gathered into a wristband of embroidery.

Renaissance braided dyed a soft cafe au lait shade constitutes another charming toilette. The elegant ensemble is gained by the richness of the braid, for there is little trimming besides. The skirt, which has a very sweeping train, is made over a chiffon petticoat, which in turn, has a foundation of heavy taffeta. The chiffon petticoat is finished with a flounce of the same material closely plaited and edged with a tiny lace ruching. What would be seen if the overdress were not made in one piece, are marked with strips of cafe au lait taffeta embroidered in French knots.

The bodice fits perfectly and is trimmed simple with graduated frills of plaited chiffon which fall in cascades over the vest, but are scarcely more than three inches wide at the arm pits.

The sleeves are elbow-length and finished with deep frills of plaited chiffon with deep frills of chiffon and lace that fall to the finger tips at points, where they are left unconfined.

In Satin-Faced Cloths.

The tan shades in satin-faced cloths are irresistably alluring. A stunning design in ladies' cloth, is much decorated with palest corn silk, overlaid with narrow silver braid and embroidery. The skirt has a multitude of plaits upon it that fall from a gauged hip-yoke, clasped and flattened by embroidery.

The bodice is given a deep yoke with elongated tabs, and is gathered into a belt of cloth, banded with gold and silver braid set close together.

Accompanying the gown is a stole scarf of fawn-colored chiffon, gauged at intervals and delicately embroidered with silver silk at the end.

Foulard silks in tan and grey delicately patterned with fall flowers and large designs in blue, black, white and olive-green are employed for various effective morning and afternoon toilettes. They are swathed in the newest trimmings in which money melts so rapidly away out of the most plethoric purse. The decorations selected for a bewitching Easter gown, which is all finished and is posing beneath its folds of tissue, in an exquisite flowered embroidery. The bodice has the embroidery almost covering the whole front, from which it is plaited back, forming a full broad front.

The back is formed and cut and fits closely, the front being very full and loose over a delightful Japanese millgreen silver girdle.

The sleeves are cut to the elbow and fall very full to deep cuffs of the flowered embroidery.

The skirt has the embroidered design all over the front seam, sloping outward from the top, from which come five tiny tucks at either side, the rest being just over the hips and sloping from the long ones. Around headed by tucks and with tucks and with tucks around the bottom. This falls very long and full over the feet and sweeps the floor in the back.

White Most Effective.

White has been so popular all winter that it can be scarcely be classed among the spring novelties. Yet there is nothing more effective. The oyster pearl and milk tints, though especially charming, are unfortunately quite expensive. It is difficult to get a desirable shade under $4 a yard. But then the materials are wide and a comparatively few yards will make a gown. In fact, when it is possible to gain such exquisite effects with taffeta and satin trimmings, one might verily piece out a scanty allowance of goods in the name of decoration.

A certain young debutante whose wedding to one of New York's—of the world's for that matter—most famous millionaires is wearing a stunning oyster-white broadcloth costume with a gathered coat. The skirt is braided six inches from the hem in ornate designs, to a width of perhaps eight inches.

The coat also shows the same braiding. There are no seams in the coat back, which is cut in the French fashion, and the slight fullness left is shirred in the center at the waistline. The long straight skirts—that is dress skirts and drop lining—are also gathered in at the waist in the center and a plain white cloth band forms the belt.

The sleeves widen until at the wrist they are quite broad and have very wide and flaring turned-back cuffs heavily braided. The collar and reverses are also braided.

Completing the costume is a broad-brimmed, white hat with slightly lifted brim and a huge white ostrich feather trails over the left side and down the back.

Under the coat is worn a blouse of white silk covered with very heavy white lace, almost like guipure cloth. The sleeves have exaggerated drooping wings above the wrist that fall far below the hands and show be-between the open, flaring portions of the cuffs.

Spring Fashions.

Spring fashions are pretty well decided upon now and many of the grotesque effects noticed among the first output of novelties have disappeared. The trimmings of various kinds that remain, though unique, have the merit of beauty and originality, and one does not hesitate before selecting them.

The most beautiful sheeny ribbons are shown in the shops for sashes. They are from four to 15 inches wide and so soft that it is possible to twist them in almost unconceivable designs without producing a bulky effect. The color combinations shown in dresses earlier in the season, seems to have shifted to the province of sashes with the result that the color schemes are delightful. Pale cowslip yellow with cornflower blue and pinkish heliotrope is both aristocratic and artistic, while eel, cream, pale olive-green and milk-white constitute another effective combination. Crash ribbons with color edge borders are new, and sell at 50 cents and upward a yard. Flowers and ribbons are all the rage and are in greater demand than satin fruit.
