WEEKLY FASHION LETTER.

New York, April 13.—The luxury in which the well-dressed woman indulges nowadays does not expend itself in street toilettes. The art and time devoted to house gowns measure them up to the standard of things sartorial.

It goes without saying that the soft clinging fabrics are selected for these gowns, but this year they are treated to an elaboration never before equalled in beauty or effect.

There is an endless variety of designs, but it is easy to detect a suggestion of the Empire in all of the new models.

The natural grace of Empire gowns is only one feature in their favor. That they are comfortable is proved by the fact that they delight the heart of the radical dress reformer as well as the butterfly of fashion.

A design that requires almost innumerable yards of silk and lace is made of lightweight pongee trimmed with Valenciennes, dyed a beautiful coral shade. The silk is cut in narrow strips which are alternated with lace insertions and formed into an accordion plaited skirt. The scant bodice or rather yoke extends barely to the bust-line and the jointure with the skirt is veiled beneath a drapery of buscuit-color chiffon. An unusual feature of the gown is the rather high neck—that is high for an Empire effect, for only enough is cut away to show the outline of a swan-like throat.

of fashion this season, it is the fact that no decided rule is followed in the modes. It is simply a matter of selecting the style and the color that suit, but all of the styles are graceful and dainty and all of the colors light, so that whatever the fancy may hit upon is comme il faut. The girl who does not like a decided Empire effect finds a delightful modification in a girde which is more of a twentieth than an eighteenth century type. In this effect, the depth is placed below rather than above the waistline and in this way unbecoming lines are not inflicted upon the well-dressed.

The province of heavy laces has been extended to house gowns and the result is that some striking designs are being exhibited in ultra-smart establishments. A creation in pure white India mull seems too delicate for the thick, coarse lace that apparently weights it down. The seams are covered with strips of the lace and the mull cut from underneath. The same idea of the lace at the top of the hem. The gown falls in graceful folds from a round gaped yoke which is lent length by a bolero of the lace threaded with narrow white crepon ribbon.

The sleeves are made in layers. First there is a loose inner sleeve of the mull ending obviously at the elbow; above this is a full puff of lace over chiffon which grows narrower as it reaches the top where there is a final cap of white peau de cygne appliqued with the dearest little lace medallions and tiny sprays of forget-me-nots.

Never were collars and revers of lace worn so much as now. This season there is, however, a new adaption of the mode which shows long stole ends at the front, falling almost to the hem of the skirt. These collars are used to trim everything from a house bodice to an opera wrap and the greatest variety in laces is allowed. In fact, very much controversy rages round the subject of colored lace. Gray braid lace looks well on a grey gown and blue woolen lace on a serge gown of the same shade, picked out in red is quite novel in appearance. In some of the smart shops handsome skirts and bodices all cut and ready to be fitted can be obtained at a reasonable sum. In fact, the trimming is already designed upon the gown. This is certainly a blessing to the home artist in these days when everything requires the touch of a master hand.

Wash Gowns.

Next to the beautiful house gowns that take the place of the Easter styles that have been on exhibition for the past few weeks, are the summer gowns of linen and canvas fabrics. These toilettes are labelled "wash" gowns but this is the only intimation that one has of the fact.

For instance, one model is made of coarse canvas which looks for all the world as if it were made of white and colored coarse crocheted cotton interwoven. It is lined with natural color glaze. There is just a fine threading of black introduced with a coarser welt of wool.

The new wash gowns are prettiest in the stone tints, red, putty and champagne, because they blend most harmoniously with the variegated laces.

The alarm that was evidenced at the combination of lincens and chiffon at the beginning of the season has quieted down into steady admiration. The combination does seem incongruous, but its beauty excuses every other disadvantage. A simple costume of white linen has the skirt trimmed from belt to hem with wide insertion of lace through which a white taffeta drop skirt gleams.

The bodice has a band of the lace running around the figure just above the girde. Above the bloused front there is a yoke of lace with the most loosely woven placed threaded with chiffon. Below the yoke there is a ruffle of chiffon laid in two wide hemstitched tucks and embroidered with linen threaded in little fleur de lys. The sleeves have caps and underereuffs of lace, with wristbands of linen.

Hip-yokes continue to be one of the most popular forms of skirt trimming, but the question of finishing the edges with becoming emphasis is a question that puzzles the best of them. Scallops are the simplest solution of the problem requiring as they do less geometrical precision than the Greek key and battlement methods, but because they are easy to gain, the commonality adopts them thereby robbing the skirt of its originality.

Craze for Buttons.

The craze for buttons increases, and they are as fashionable upon wash dresses as upon more expensive toilettes. For the linen fabrics there are carved pearl, crocheted and linen buttons of all sizes and designs; voiles, etamines and the like are ornamented with anything from a mother-of-yearl to a genuine diamond button.

For summer shirt waists there come very pretty button sets that are fastened upon braids and can be easily changed from one waist to another. The majority are made of pearl, but there is an expensive novelty in burnt wood that is particularly chic. Burnt leather belts will be very popular this year; so much so in fact that belts and hat bands of summer sailors will be sold in sets to match later on. They are rain-proof, pliable and artistic and quite the newest detail that one might add to one's wardrobe. MAUDE GRIFFIN.

Power goes straight to the man who can shoulder it; responsibility goes to the man who knows how to do things.
