SEEN IN THE FLOOD

TERRIFIED ANIMALS TAKE REFUGE ON ANYTHING IN SIGH

ed Districts of the East-Strange Sights That Met Tourists' Eyes.

Some curious sights have been seen and are still visible at times along the railroads leading into Memphis from Arkansas through the flooded country near the Mississippi river, says a writer in the Arkansas Gazette. Up to Sunday the Iron mountain was the only line that was open, but on that day the Frisco got its first train through. Passengers on the Iron Mountain and Choctaw trains quite generally go to the windows or the platforms when they draw near Memphis in order to see the track in the flooded region. The water is now below the ralls, but pieces of driftwood against the rails shows that the water was entirely over the track at places. The Iron Mountain has used an immense amount of stone in weighting down its track, and along the north side of the roadbed thousands of sacks of earth have been laid and securely packed.

All the cotton platforms and freight depot stations in the overflowed region are being used as islands of safety and contain tents for people and pens for stock. At several points chickens were seen perching on the gable of a house. How they got food was not apparent. One house near the railroad was tethered to a big tree with a heavy iron chain, which had been led out the front door, the other end having evidently been fas-tended to the timbers inside.

At one station on the Choctaw there were four mules, one horse, three dogs, six pigs, two cows, two negroes-and four white men living on a big raft, which had been made from a cotton platform and pieces of timber. The men were living in a small tent, and the pigs had their hind legs tied one to another.

Probably the most interesting feature of the flood is its effect on wild animals. An official of the Choctaw railroad, who walked at night seven miles west from the eastern terminal the Mississippi river the first day the water got high enough to stop trains, says that at every few feet he saw a pair of green eyes gleaming at him in the darkness. These were the optics of snakes and various kinds of animals.

A passenger on a train saw a rabbit sitting on top of a fence post near the railroad track. He mentioned the circumstance, and was told by a railroad official that the people in the flooded country are now hunting rabbits in trees. It is a fact that the little animals have scrambled from driftwood to the branches of trees that reach down to the water, and, crouching there, cold and frightened, may be knocked into a skiff with a stick. One negro was seen who had the bottom of his boat full of rabbits he had captured in this way.

On the first day the water got high enough to stop the train service the Choctaw road an official of that line saw 10 deer on the track near Edmondson, which is 16 miles from Memphis. Six of these deer were shot by a negro, although this is the closed season. A deer was on the track near the bridge just east of Edmondson, and being frightened by the approach of some railroad men jumped into the water. The swift curent bore him down against the bridge and the railroad men lifted him out by his ears.

A mouse was seen afloat on a small block of wood. He was continually running around his little raft as if seeking some way to escape, and no doubt wondered what new kind of a trap this was he had been caught in.

A railroad repair party flushed a possum which had taken refuge in a hole that the water had washed out under the track. The little animal jumped into the water and swam to jumped into the water and swam to a nearby tree, into whose branches he climbed. In the top was a big bird's nest, and Mr. O'Possum made straight for it, and ensconsed himself therein. True, it was a last year's bird's nest, but with the small amount of good holes and hollows available 'possums in eastern Arkansas just now, this one was not in a mood to demand that anything be charged off on account of depreciation and wear and tear.

Gathering of Georgia Elks.

Valdosta, Ga., April 15.—Valdosta has hung the latch string on the outside and put the big pot in the little one for the genial members of the Order of Elks, who are here fram At-lanta, Macon, Savannah and other cities in attendance on the first annual state convention of the order. MAY GET ISLANDS.

Reported That Danish Commissioner Will Favor Disposal of West Indian Possessions to United States.

Advices received at Washington are to the effect that the royal commission left St. Thomas a few days Tales From Travels's Through Floyd-frame of mind. After the treaty of cession had been laid aside the Dan-ish government to placate the resi-dents of the Danish West Indies and the people at home who favored ces-sion to the United States, sent this commission to the islands to devise means for the improvement of the conditions of the islanders by the re-adjustment of salaries, the establishment of direct steamship lines and changes in customs duties, which it was hoped might reconcile the islanders to their retention by Denmark. It now appears that the commission was very much discouraged by what it saw and heard, so it is entirely possible that there will be a strong vival of the cession movement in

Denmark when they return, Technically, the treaty of cession ratified by the United States senate is pending before the Danish government and if there is a change in pub-lic feeling there it may be ratified. and the cession completed providing the Rigsdag is called in special session before July, when the time allowed for exchange of ratifications ex
