Not a Clear Title.

The word "furlough" occurred in a reading lesson of a primary grade in one of the public schools, says the Philadelphia Ledger. The teacher asked if any boy or girl knew the meaning of the word.

One small hand was raised and shaken vigorously in the eagerness of the urchin to display his knowledge. When he received permission to speak he rose, and with the greatest assurance said:

"Furlough means a mule."
Not a whit disturbed at the teacher's "Oh, no, it doesn't," the small boy confidently answered:
"I have the book at home that says so." Then the teacher told him he might bring the book to school and show it to her.
The next morning he came armed with the book and triumphantly showed her the picture of an American soldier astride a mule, under which was printed, "Going home on his furlough."

A FILIPINO BELLE.
How She Appears When Fully Attired For the Ball Room.

In describing the costume of a Filipino belle, one begins naturally at the slippered feet and works toward the diamond-decked hair. First thing is the media, or long stocking, usually of silk often beautifully embroidered about the foot and ankle, the embroidery being plainly seen because of the low-topped, heelless chinelas, or slippers, usually worn, which are also often beautifully embroidered on the top. Then comes the vestida, the long train dress, fastened by a band at the waist, and usually allowed to trail at the left side. When caught up out of the way it is passed across the front of the body and fastened to a belt on the right side. This vestida is made of silk, satin or velvet, very rich, and as the Spanish taste for red, yellow and black is shared by the Filipino, the floor of a ball room while a ball is in progress, is more or less of a poem in those colors, with occasional hints of blue and green. Usually these ball and inner vestidas are elegantly and expensively hand embroidered in silk, as much as $500 to $1000 being often the cost of a single dress skirt.
The next garment is the camisa, which performs the function of the American shirt waist. It surrounds the underclothing that enfolds the upper portion of the body, having a low neck, but not cut decolette—no Filipino woman would wear a decolette dress—and has very wide, short sleeves. It is made of the beautiful thin pina cloth, manufactured from the fibre of the pineapple leaf, and is practically transparent. The cloth is sufficiently stiff to cause the large sleeves to stand out from the arms and shoulders and not to cling to them as silk and cotton goods will do, and is, therefore much more suited to the warm climate of the Philippines. This camisa is also usually embroidered expensively, sometimes in whites and sometimes in delicate tints.
The collar, or collar, is also made of the thin, stiff and expensively embroidered pina cloth. It is about the size of the small opera shawl worn in this country, and is folded and worn about the shoulders and neck in much the same way, the ends being crossed over the bust and fastened there with a clasp of diamonds. The hair is carefully arranged, usually in the Spanish style, now so popular with our own young ladies, and all the diamonds there is room for or wealth permits are used as ornaments.

A BROKEN ENGINE

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT WILL CLOSE FOR REPAIRS.
Large Nut From Follower Head Fell Into the Cylinder, Resulting in Damages That Will Cost $2500 to Repair.
This morning at 4 o'clock there occurred an accident which will result in closing down the electric light plant for from two weeks to a month, and which incurs an expense of between $2500 and $3000 for repairs.
The plant was under full swing at the hour mentioned, with no indication whatever that any part of the machinery was either defective or out of order, and with no premonitory symptoms of an accident. Herman Kruger, the night engineer, was in charge when the smash came. He had no idea of the extent or character of the damage, but at once shut off steam and brought everything to an immediate stop. Dr. Vincent, who always sleeps with a light burning in his room was instantly awakened by the room being in darkness, and at once went down to the power house.
Examination disclosed the origin of the break-down to be the dropping off of a large nut from the follower head into the cylinder. The nut is about the size of a man's thumb and fell into a compartment that is open at every half stroke of the piston and completely closed at every full stroke. The first stroke of the piston resulted in a hole being broken through the piston head, and the next few strokes resulted in a general smash caused by the escaping steam and the engine consequently going wild. The piston rod, four inches in diameter, was bent; the connecting rod, five inches in diameter, was sprung out of true at least an inch and a half. All the result of a 250-horse power engine running wild for about 20 seconds or less. But for the self-possession of the engineer the damage would have been much greater. Minor parts of the engine were sprung and shattered by the tremendous jarring and oscillation of those few seconds, and the entire engine will have to be overhauled.
It is not thought possible that the expense of shipping the engine to Portland, which must be done, and the repairs there can cost less than $3000. The repairs may be effected within two weeks, but from three weeks to a month is more liable to be the time that will elapse before the plant is running again. This is the first shut-down of the electric plant for a longer period than two and a half consecutive days since the plant was installed 15 years ago.
There remains upon the premises one 100-horse power engine in perfect repair, but it does not afford power to operate the present plant, which requires 33 horse power to overcome the friction. The management greatly regrets the accident—as much or more on account of the inconvenience to the public as on account of the expense incurred. The patrons of the company have always been patient and reasonable when accident has resulted heretofore in delays, and the manager regrets the complete untowardness of the accident.
The cause of the smash is attributed to the disintegration of the iron in the bolt head to which the nut was fastened, allowing it to break almost by its own weight. This is a phenomenon often met with in the handling of large machinery subject to high and protracted speed. It is a development brought about by time, and no research and study has ever been in the slightest degree able to divine either when or in what particular place steel will give way that is a part of rapidly running machinery, that has been in use for many years.

Impounded Horses Sold.
Nine impounded horses which have been in the custody of the city for some time, were sold to Walter Lindsey yesterday for $36. Some of the animals have been in the city pound for some time, and the total expense of caring for them is not far from the figure at which they sold.
