TALKS IRRIGATION

ELWOOD MEAD, GOVERNMENT EXPERT, NOW IN OREGON.

Says There is no Doubt About Oregon's Future Under Irrigation—The Government is Prospecting for Most Acceptable Propositions.

Elwood Mead, chief of the government irrigation surveys, who is now in Portland, will visit the Eastern Oregon irrigation sites this week. Mr. Mead is an enthusiast and a practical utilitarian irrigationist. In speaking of the subject in general to a representative of the Oregon Daily Journal, he says:

"There are thousands of settlers coming into this part of the country and arid lands are in many sections being taken up. It is the intention of those who thus become owners to fertilize the soil by means of irrigation and thus render it productive. Now our object is to pave the way for such endeavor and to so arrange matters that the efforts of those engaged in this great work of change and reclamation may not be misdirected. We intend to send competent officers into the Hood River country, Eastern Oregon and other localities where irrigation has been successfully carried out to make a study of the methods employed and what these officers learn will be set forth in bulletins which are to be issued free to settlers."

Experiments in Fifteen States.

For several years experiments have been carried out by the irrigation department to determine the exact amount of water necessary to properly irrigate a given area of a certain kind of land. In 15 states this work has been going on and similar tests are to be made in Oregon. Speaking of this Mr. Mead said:

"In order that the settler may not waste his substance it is necessary that he should know the exact amount of water that will be beneficial to the land he intends to render productive. He must know the season of the year to begin the distribution of such water and just when he should stop to get the best results. It is this knowledge that we propose to supply."

Laws Are Needed.

"Laws and customs needed in the proper government of irrigation corporations, whether public or private, is another matter in which we are deeply concerned and upon which our agents must report, it being desirable to prevent litigation whenever possible and to promote the working together of all in peace and harmony."

While practically none of this work has thus far been done in Oregon, Mr. Mead says irrigation officials have been conducting experiments and ascertaining results in the state of Washington for several years with excellent results.

"It is not that the department has any doubt that irrigation will be of benefit in Oregon," Mr. Mead said, "that experts are to be sent, but only in order that time, labor and money expenditure may be saved the farmers. In this way it will be possible for the arid land reclaimer to profit by the mistakes others have made and not have to go ahead, blindly, and work out his own salvation."

Mr. Mead has no doubt that large government appropriations will be made for irrigation purposes, but he has no personal connection with that branch of the irrigation business, being interested solely in providing the knowledge to serve as a groundwork for actual operations.
