SPECIAL POLICE NECESSARY.

Walla Walla Will Furnish Ample Protection To Visitors.

Dozens of special police will be sworn in on president's day to protect the crowds that come to Walla Walla from the horde of pickpockets, sneak thieves and all-round crooks, said to be following in the wake of the president's train and making rich hauls out of the crowds assembled to see the president, says the Statesman.

Chief Kauffman this morning said he had as yet made no definite arrangement as to the number of special officers he would place on that day, but he expected to appoint a sufficient number to protect the crowds as far as possible from any organized gang of pickpockets.

To co-operate with the local police will be several special officers from the presidential train, who are fully acquainted with every noted crook in the United States. It was through their efforts that several noted "dips" working in the crowd at San Francisco during the president's recent trip there, were recognized and captured.
