Dayton	20	9	11	450

Pendleton is no hog, neither are her ball players selfish and avaricious. They may win, but they do it in such a nice manner; and they sometimes lose, but then they do it gracefully, and in a way that delighteth the hearts of the fans.

Saturday afternoon the game was as fierce as the heat—for a while. So was the umpire, and so was the crowd. Of all the illustrations of umpirical rattledness, Ripley is surely Exhibit A. He is a peach and a rosy unique dream, a parti-colored landscape in old gold and crimson, with a gilt frame and a red plush mat. But that doesn't make any difference; it was the game that counted, and it counted clear across the score board. In the first inning the genial and open handed umpire presented Dayton with a bouquet of three runs, but that effort exhausted his generosity and he went out of the Santa Claus business, perhaps because it was too hot to keep up the pace.

It took Pendleton three times to cross the plate, but at the last of the third inning they sent one man across the plate for a starter, and at the end of the inning the score stood 4 to 1 in favor of Dayton. Then the game commenced to slip and slide around. The Dayton boys were tired and it was too hot to go around the ring, so they allowed Pendleton to do it for them, and they did. In the fifth inning they made two trips, in the sixth two more, and in the seventh they scored six times and Brockhoff made a home run. After that they rested and the game closed with a score of 11 to 4 in favor of Pendleton.

Brockhoff's home run was the play of the season. He swung the ball over the fence back of left field, and trotted around the path as confidently as a colt behind a buggy. The effort netted him about $15, the enthusiastic bench crowds grinding out that amount in a Panama hat.

Sunday's Game.
Sunday's game, though, was the game, and it took 11 chapters to tell the story, and had it not been for a slight mistake by the tragedian on Pendleton's start stop station, it might have been a serial story with the old familiar "to be continued" bracketed under the summary.

The game opened with a gloomy outlook for the Indians. Dayton took the willow and Kid Williams hit to first and stole second. Loughheed did the identical, and then Ski Williams came to bat. He made a long hit that scored the top column men and a moment later scored on Spiedel's error. Donovan walked to first, and then three men went out in one, two three order. Pendleton nearly evened things when the local boys took a chance at the path between the sacks. Stevenson walked Neagle, he was sent to second on Gass' hit to first, stole third and scored on Brown's hit. Gass stole second after his hit to first and scored on a passed ball. Brockhoff had gone out to right field and Spiedel and Hartman both hit at Stevenson's benders and sought the bench.

Dayton went out in three straight attempts in the first of the second, and Pendleton took a couple more of credit marks to the field with them when they went out in the last half. Danforth walked, but went out at second. Collier went to first on fielder's choice, but went out at home. Neagle and Brockhoff both hit to first and Gass did the same thing, filling the bases. Dunn came to the bat and put one out over the second baseman's head that scored Neagle and Brockhoff. Brown struck out, leaving the score 4 to 3 in Pendleton's favor. And there the balance swayed until the first half of the ninth, when Stevenson scored on Donovan's hit, and the bars of justice swung even with four nuggets in each pan. By this time a thunder storm had come up and the wind and dust obscured the field at times, but the 10th inning was started with a grim determination on both sides. The 10th inning was featureless and without result, but the 11th told the tale. Kid Williams hit to first and went to third on Hartman's error. Loughheed hit to first and stole second. Ski Williams sent a hot one to Spiedel, who scored Kid Williams and Loughheed on a wild throw to first. Ski Williams went out on an attempted to steal to second, Donovan went out to Neagle in the left garden, and Wells went out to Gass. In the second half Danforth started the beginning of the end by flying out to Loughheed; Collier hit to first and Neagle stopped the agony by going out on a fly to second, which was doubled to first for the benefit of Collier. Collier was to the bat yesterday and walked four men and struck out three. Stevenson walked four men and struck out 10.
