A POCKET HUNTER

MYSTERIOUS PROSPECTOR OF THE BLUE MOUNTAINS.

Thought to Have Unearthed Rich Pockets on Head of Meacham Creek—Visited One Reven for Eight Summers—Made no Acquaintances and Told No Tales.

A romance of no little interest is thought to be locked up in the actions of an old prospector who regularly visited the Blue mountains for seven or eight summers up till last season, when he failed to put in an appearance.

He was a veteran prospector of the '49 type, with grizzled beard and long hair and each season of the eight years he visited the region between Kamela and the summit of Mt. Emily, which forms the western border of Grande Ronde valley, he rode the same grey mare, and led with him the same heavily-laden pack mule.

He was a very reticent man and talked to no one. He would appear at Kamela about June 1, lay in a large supply of smoking tobacco and baking powder, and would then disappear on the timber trails as mysteriously as he came.

No one thought much of his visits until C. T. Taylor, who was formerly O. R. & N. agent at Kamela, learned from the old man that he was a prospector and that he spent at least four months each year in the deep recesses at the headwaters of Meacham creek and Dry creek that runs by Summerville.

No one ever thought of following him to see where he worked or what he did during those three or four months, as mountaineers are accustomed to this kind of transient men and think nothing of their mysterious actions.

Since he has ceased to visit this section, those who remember him very well, and who have found some of the evidences of his work in the deep canyons of the Blue mountains have found out that he was a "pocket hunter," and that he was so well rewarded for his summer's work that he quickly returned each year to pursue his search.

The discovery of coarse gold in the small streams that run down the sides of Mt. Emily, has led old miners to believe that this grizzled old veteran was literally loading a pack mule with coarse gold and nuggets, from hidden "pockets" in that remote district.

His visits are now recalled with keen interest by old residents of Kamela, who wish now they had inquired more thoroughly into his vocation.

At many places in the region he prospected over his old camps, have been found by hunters and the deep cut ditches and peculiar marks of an expert "pocket hunter" have been stumbled on to in the most inaccessible canyons.

During the eight years he prospected in that region, the only real acquaintance he formed was with C. T. Taylor, who kept a small stock of goods at Kamela. He did not receive a letter at any time, nor write one while in the mountains, so far as is known, and his whereabouts now are absolutely unknown.

He is thought to have been one of that rare class of miners who make a specialty of hunting rich pockets, and who study the topography of a country with no other view than that of locating pockets of gold. When they strike it right, they strike it rich, but often search for years without making a single find.

The most famous "pocket hunter" of Eastern Oregon, is "Kaniaka Sam," a Panama negro, who lives at Sparta, in Baker county and who has uncovered some of the richest pockets of gold ever found in the Inland Empire.

He has no system, no regularity. He just hunts, that's all.

SCAB AT SHANIKO.

Seventeen Carloads of Sheep Held by Inspectors.

A special stock train consisting of 15 carloads of sheep, loaded at Shaniko and billed to Omaha, passed over the O. R. & N. last night.

There would have been 32 cars in this shipment, but upon arrival at the stock yards, the government inspector found part of them to be infected with the scab, in a light form and held 17 carloads for further developments. These infected sheep are being dipped today and will have to be held for 10 days before shipment.

It was thought by stockmen that the scab had been completely stamped out in the Shaniko district and this instance comes as a surprise.
