WEEKLY FASHION LETTER.

New York, July 18.—Flower-scented gowns are not a fad of the moment in Gotham, but a permanent fashion. Delicate lincens, mousselines and vaporines besprinkled with marguerites, roses, carnations, heliotropes and forget-me-nots are scented with corresponding sachets and so adorned my lady whizzes by leaving behind a delicate fragrance that delights the sense of mere man and excites the envy of ever-lovely woman.

A cream white mousseline has medallions—diamond-shaped—set around the bottom of the skirt above which are groups of tucks, then another row of medallions and so on until the hip yoke is reached. The yoke has a padded interlining filled with violet sachet since the ground work of the mousseline is cream, covered with violets. Secreted here and there in the lace trimmed bodice are tiny little sachets of the powder which afford just a long enough whiff of the perfume to create a desire for more.

This is a season when woman almost intuitively economizes. It is, therefore, not surprising to know that many leaders of fashion, in order to save a pretty penny and at the same time have their sachets of highest excellence, compound their own fragrant powders. A delightful and lasting odor is made from 10 ounces of powdered lavender flowers (powdered) mixed with three ounces of powdered benzoin, six ounces of Cyprus powder and one and a half drams of oil of lavender.

The carnation-embroidered lincens appeal especially to women who like crimson effects. The skirt of a charming model has a deep flounce of heavy cream lace threaded here and there with crimson silk. Above the flounce is a band of embroidered carnations, finished with a strip of insertion matching the lace flounce. The fullness about the hips is taken in with tiny tucks extending all the way around the figure from either side of the front width.

The bodice blouses over a circle of Albert's satin embroidered in carnations rimmed in medallions of lace. The yoke is a transparent affair in faced mousseline and lace. Coming down over the shoulder seams to the cuffs of the sleeves are rather military looking straps that are robbed of their severity, however, by being carried out in the embroidered lace. The collar is a band of embroidery applied with lace and finished very simply at the back with a jeweled stock pin.

Fascinating, Diaphanous Plaids.

Some of the diaphanous plaids are nothing less than fascinating. A decidedly French effect is in white silk with a tiny green plaid in it. The bodice hooks up at the back invisibly and is tight fitting, while it blouses somewhat in front, being all in tiny tucks. Across the front, coming to a point is a design in cherries and leaves embroidered in silk over it. This design is on the cuffs and forms the collar around the throat. Many of the smartest gowns are scantily supplied with neckbands, the narrowest strips of lace or embroidery being employed for the collar. The fashion is cool and besides affords an opportunity of wearing off the ten-tail dark ring that high stocks invariably leave on the throat.

Coming to a point in the front of the bodice is a crushed girde. The sleeves are tucked above and have wide lace insertions caught together to form the lower part, coming into the cuffs quite full.

The skirt is close fitting above, having a corded yoke coming round the hips and then down the front panel, sloping toward the feet. From this panel comes the lace about 14 inches deep and then sloped around, below which the skirt flares very much at the bottom, having a few applied tucks to finish it.

Completing the gown is a pinkish-white straw turning up at the side and front a trifle, with a large satin bow under the brim, while the top is massed with blush roses.

Mention has been made before of the new silk grenadines which are constantly growing in favor. They are as sheer as gauze and have a fine silky finish. White grenadine with a pattern of strewn roses forms the material of a lovely summer gown. The design is elaborately trimmed with squares of tuckings and lace outlined with entre deux. This trimming runs directly down the center of the front of the skirt and has narrow pink ribbon run through it. It also extends around the top of the circular flounce which finishes it at the bottom and falls full and long over the feet, with a slight dip to the back. The upper part fits closely over the hips and is plain in the back.

The bodice has a deep yoke formed of these squares run in with pale pink ribbon. The yoke comes down quite long over the shoulders and continues down the center of the front. It is hooked invisibly at the back and blouses in front, having a long pink ribbon sash tied in a tiny bow in the back, with the ends falling over the skirt.

Black and White Contrasts.

No wardrobe is complete with a black hat and a black gown. The latter may be carried out either in lawn, mull, net or point d'esprit, but the fabric par excellence for a black hat this summer is tulle, the very finest obtainable and shirred from rib to crown. A very pretty idea is to
