PENDLETON SUPPLIES A WONDERFUL COUNTRY.

All Phases of Traffic and Civilization Seen Here—Stage Coaches and Railroad Trains Collect and Distribute Supplies.

No sooner have the lamb and wool crops been taken care of in Umatilla county than the wheat crop claims attention.

The four and six-horse teams that have lined the roads into the interior for the past two months, hauling in wool and hauling out supplies, are now pulling combined harvesters.

Perhaps no other point in Oregon presents the same business features as the city of Pendleton.

The frontier settlement, the rich farming district, the great range sections and the busy metropolitan mercantile establishments are all seen here in the perfect stage.

The great interior sections bring their wool, ore, livestock and wheat to this city, where they are either made use of in the various industries here, or distributed to the markets of the coast.

The spectacle of a band of 200 head of beef cattle driven for 150 miles from the range districts to this city for shipment, is a common occurrence.

The roads that lead from Pendleton to the interior are the only original freight roads of any length left in Northeastern Oregon.

The area of rich country tributary to Pendleton and dependent upon Pendleton make it the greatest distributing point in the state outside of Portland.

The present and the past with their varied modes of living are seen mingling together. The up-to-date business houses of every description supplies the need of a conglomerate population of pioneers, frontiersmen, rangers, farmers, miners, workingmen and tradesmen.

From an outside point of view, it is the most picturesque town in Oregon.
