CLOSE FOR REPAIRS

WOOLEN MILLS SHUT DOWN DURING AUGUST.

Entire Plant Will Undergo Its Annual Overhauling—Employees Will All Take a Month's Vacation—Labor of These Mills Is Not Organized—Heavy Advance Orders for Indian Robes and Blankets.

On August 5th the Pendleton Woolen Mills will close up shop for their annual shut-down, the time when they do all of their house-cleaning and resting for the year to come. For the last few years it has been the custom of the management of the mills to shut down about this time of the year for the larger part of the month, and it has been found to be a good thing not only for the mechanical condition of the mills, but for the good of the employees.

All through the year as repairs are needed and the machinery wears the work is put off if the condition of the machine will warrant, and in this way there is no stoppage and no halt in the work from the time the mill starts in September till it stops again in August. This system has been found to save time and trouble and to work for the best interests of the mill in every way.

Vacation for a Month.

When the mills shut down on the evening of the next pay day, all of the hands will be able to take a vacation for the rest of the month. Two machinists will be carried on the mill's pay roll for the month of August, and that is all. In that time all of the machinery will be overhauled, every belt and pulley and bolt will be examined, and when the time comes to start once more the machines will be in as good condition as they were the day they were installed.

And the help will be in good condition, also. Eleven months in the heat and noise of a woolen mill is a nerve-racking term of service, and as the time for vacation draws near the employees grow restless and look forward with longing for the last day of work to come. When they come back from their outing they are fresh and willing and ready for the work of the coming year. Since the inauguration of the new plan the men at the head of the mill have failed to see any difference in the output of the mills. It would be natural to expect that one month of the year would be lost in output if the mills are idle for that length of time, but experience has shown that the employees do as much work in the 11 months when they have their vacation, as they do in the 12 without it. And they are cheerful and contented about it, and all work for the best interests of the mills.

Is a Pendleton Institution.

It is the desire of the management of the Pendleton mills to make the plant as much of a local thing as possible, to make it dependent on the city, and make the city own an interest in it, and in accordance with this idea it is encouraging the use of home people in all of the departments more and more. The day of the tramp weaver and spinner has gone and the looms are now worked by men and girls who make their place their home and whose interests are here. By this system all of the departments are kept running, where in the old days they ran or not, as the caprice of the drifting weavers said.

While the labor of the mills is unorganized, it is not from any action of the management, for they are not unfriendly to organized labor. But they are paying more than the union scale, and their employees are content to let things go as they are. They have no grievances, and if they had, the mills are not so large but that each and every one of the hands could talk their wrongs, fancied or real, over face to face with the men at the head of the plant.

For this reason and from the fact of the high wages there is no desire to unionize and no lack of harmony.

The special work of the mills is recognized to such an extent in the East that all of the plants formerly in the business of making Indian robes and blankets have gone out of that line and turned their orders over to these mills, recognizing the fact that they could not compete with them. The mills are, as a result, working to the full capacity, and have orders ahead that will keep them that way for some time, even if they had no other business in sight.

LIGHT HAY CROP.

Many Grant County Fields Are Very Dry.

The haying is well under way throughout the Long Creek country. Now and then there will be found a field that contains an excellent crop of hay or grain, but the hay crop on an average throughout all of Northern Grant county is very light. The grass is also very short both on the range and in pastures and stock are very slow in getting fat this summer. Last winter was a long one.

There was no hay left over from last winter and stockmen are depending altogether on this summer's crop to feed their stock through next winter. Unless considerable stock is sold or driven out of the country the hay that will be raised this summer, it is believed, will be insufficient to feed them through next winter.—Long Creek Light.
