TELEPHONE WORK

RURAL LINES SOUTH AND WEST HAVE CHANGED HANDS.

Nineteen Miles New Line Being Added to the Ninety-five Miles Now in Operation—Repairs Being Made to the Present Mileage by William Hilton, the New Proprietor.

William Hilton, of this city, has bought the Pendleton Telephone Company of John Endicott, and will make of it one of the institutions for the advancement of the county.

There are at the present time over 95 miles of line in operation on this circuit, which comes into the office of the Pacific States Telephone Company building at this city, thus giving connection with all of the 'phones from any place in the city.

Mr. Hilton is now at work putting in about 19 miles of new line, to extend from Owens ranch on Bear creek to Butter creek, about three miles above Vinson, up the creek for over four miles to Gulliford's ranch, and then down and across country to Charles Cunningham's big sheep ranch. To this new line lateral lines will be strung covering the whole of the country in that vicinity.

The main line now extends to Pilot Rock, Alba, Seal Springs and other stations along the line. It now covers the country in pretty good shape and as soon as the plans of the new management are materialized it will be as convenient as can be made.

Mr. Hilton is now engaged with a force of men in examining the line and putting in new poles where necessary, so that the system will be in the best condition by the time the bad weather of the winter sets in. In the spring, when the weather is settled, the work of improvement will start.

BIG FIND OF HONEY.

Sam Endicott Discovered a Cave Near Pilot Rock Containing 500 Pounds.

Samuel Endicott, the veteran bee hunter of Umatilla county, has just returned from a trip into the wilds of the Bear creek country, where he went in search of honey.

He reports a big find in the mountains about 10 miles to the southwest of Pilot Rock. While following the trail of a bee he came upon the old cave where the salt peter discovery was made years ago, and found it to be filled with honey. A large swarm of bees was located in the cave and they had evidently been there for several years, as the cave was packed with the results of their labor. It is estimated that at least 500 pounds of honey are stored away in the cave. Mr. Endicott will leave in a short time for the place with sufficient paraphernalia in which to put the result of his find when he will force a corner in the local honey market.

MONSTER CARROT.

A Fifteen Pounder Raised on Wild Horse by Grant Earhart.

C. C. Berkley has on exhibition in his window on Main street, a monster carrot which was brought into the city today by Grant Earhart, of Wild Horse. The carrot weighs 15 pounds, is 2 1/2 feet in length and 20 inches in circumference at the largest part. It was grown on the ranch of Mr. Earhart, and is one of several large ones that he has raised this year. The carrot was so big that it had to be grubbed out of the ground like the root of a tree, to keep from breaking it in two.

SOCIAL EVENTS OF THE WEEK

Concerning the People of Pendleton and Vicinity • Notes Personal and Otherwise • By Our Regular Correspondent

Thanksgiving week and social festivities incident thereto, were overshadowed this year by the loss of one of Pendleton's social favorites in the death of Miss Lenore Sheridan whose friends were legion.

The dance which was to have been given Wednesday night by Mr. William Sturgis, was abandoned in deference to the bereavement felt by the acquaintances of the deceased.

Numerous home dinners were given, to which were invited particular friends of host and hostess, King Turk reigning supreme. Thus passed the day which marked all that occurred, of importance, in a social way during the week past.

A Polite "Yes" or "No."

"Yes ma'am" and "No ma'am" are no more.

The movement against the usage of such servile forms of denial and affirmation has been slow in coming. It has worked its way slowly from the cultured home to the kindergarten and from the kindergarten it has passed to the public schools.

For years the shrill piping of many voices in "Yes ma'am" and "No ma'am" has sent a chill to the heart of the visiting mamma, whose special care it has been to train the little one to say, "Yes, mother, or "No, Miss Brown."

But the teachers no longer require such parrot-like replies; they are discouraging the use of "ma'am." The youngsters may answer their teachers with the simple "Yes" and a well bred "No."

The tacking on of "ma'am" or "air" to the plain "yes" and "no" is a trill which English speaking people are delighted to be rid of.

CLUB AND FEDERATION.

While Oregon women are making heroic efforts to erect a suitable monument to Sacajawea at the Lewis and Clark fair, there is also a movement on foot to erect a like statue at St. Louis.

In arranging to erect a statue to the memory of Sacajawea on the world's fair grounds the Louisiana Purchase exposition company is showing a commendable intelligence.

The work of this heroic Shoshone as a member of the Lewis and Clark exploring party contributed more than any other one thing, aside from that done by the two leaders, to the success of that expedition. Without her, in fact, at more than one crisis in the career of the explorers, the expedition would probably have had to give up.

The government never paid a cent for her services. Historians have overlooked her altogether. The very small part of the country which ever knew anything about her had forgotten her. The world's fair company is doing a very charitable and patriotic act in rescuing from oblivion the name and deeds of this pathfinder of the American wilderness.

The reasons why Sacajawea was neglected by her contemporaries can readily be pointed out. Tested by the standards of 1850-60, the years in which she figured, she was under a triple ban. Sacajawea was a woman, she was an Indian and she was a slave.

Under the orthodox conception of things a century ago, a woman was an inferior species, a little above a dog or a horse, perhaps, but distinctively lower than a man. When as in this particular case, the woman chanced to be also an Indian and likewise a slave, she manifestly had no rights that men were bound to respect.

The credit for Sacajawea's work went to her husband, Chaboneau, who, as his record occurs in Lewis and Clark's voluminous journal, must have been as nearly worthless as any personage whose name comes down to us from the pages of sacred or profane history.

Both the explorers had a high regard for the Bird Woman, and even in her earlier connection with the expedition they gave her name to a river in the present Montana, but that designation has long since been buried under the name of Crooked creek, by which it is known on the present maps.

It is possible for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition company to give the memory of Sacajawea an additional honor to that which will be conferred by the statue.

It is the intention of the company to have a large number of Indians at the fair. Among these should be some of her descendants, if there are any, and doubtless there are. She had a baby with her on the expedition. He would be about 95 years of age now, if alive, but probably he is not alive.

Maximilian, Prince of Wied, saw Chaboneau and Sacajawea while he was among the Mandanians in 1823-34. The Indian office at Washington could probably trace out her descendants if any are living, by ordering an investigation among the red men of our present North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana.

If any persons of the blood of this gallant Shoshone pilot of the plains and mountains of a century ago are alive they would make a decidedly interesting exhibit for the St. Louis world's fair.

Was Not Konasek.

Bruce Hanrahan, the boy who was fatally injured by falling from the brake-beam of No. 1, the O. & N. passenger train, at Bridal Veil, Thursday, died at Portland yesterday. It was reported that this was young Konasek, of this city, but there was no foundation for the report whatever. Hanrahan, with a companion, was heading his way to Portland, and never lived in this city, and there was no foundation for the reports printed to that effect.
