AGE OF IRRIGATION

REAWAKENING OF THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS

England in Egypt and India, France in the Sahara and America on the Deserts of Arizona and New Mexico are performing matchless feats in Reclamation.

There is no one thing that proffends future greatness of the present civilization more than the efforts now being put forth in all the arid regions of the earth to make the desert and waste places habitable and productive. Archaeologists tell us that where they have found man's struggle for existence hardest, there they have found the highest types of civilization that are dead and gone.

On the high plateaus of South America and the mesas of Mexico; in the desert where flows the Nile, on the bleached plains of Arabia and where the sacred Ganges courses to the sea are found traces of feats of irrigating skill, broken works of art, ruined temples and shrines that equal and in some instances surpass the boasted skill of modern engineering, art and architecture.

Notably among these was the great canal ways taken from the Euphrates and Tigris to make fruitful the desert plains of ancient Chaldea. These it were that made it possible to have such flourishing cities ages ago as Nipur, Ninevah and Babylon. One of these canals was over 350 miles in length and when running through the open country between 300 and 400 feet in width and ten feet in depth. The other canal was very nearly as long and large as this one and the two of them watered something like 2,500,000 acres of land. But conquest depopulated Chaldea and floods washed away and sands covered up the handwork of its ancient inhabitants.

All this vast amount of arid land is now to be reclaimed under the management of Sir William Wilcox. He places the cost of reconstructing the canals at £21,000,000 or a little over $100,000,000.

The British government is now working on the Sone project in India which when completed will extend a distance of 370 miles and irrigate 500,000 acres of land. Besides this there have been constructed in India over 2,000 miles of canals which irrigate over 6,000,000 acres of land. The British in Africa have but recently completed two enormous dams to store the waters of the upper Nile, which will reclaim several millions of acres of land of the Sahara desert.

Australia is also beginning to take steps to reclaim her arid plains, but unfortunately this country is not so well traversed with streams, nor is the rainfall sufficient at any season of the year in many localities to warrant building large reservoirs for storage purposes, so that the irrigation problem in that country will not be so easily solved as it is in many other parts of the world, but time and the ingenuity of man will find a way to somehow people the Australian deserts and make them blossom like the rose.

It is safe to say that, so far as America is concerned, within the next 30 years the United States government will have reclaimed at least 10,000,000 acres of its arid lands. This means more than 60,000 new farms of 160 acres each. It also means the stimulating of the agricultural interests of this country to a degree never before known, and the dawning of a greater prosperity for America than any nation on earth.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S BOOTS.

Another Side to the Life of the Noted Statesman.

A retired Bath resident who was a clerk in a Boston shoe store when a lad tells the following story of Daniel Webster:

One morning the Bath boy, who had to report early and sweep out the store before the proprietor arrived, received a call from Mr. Webster. The noted statesman was fitted with a new pair of shoes without any trouble by the clerk, who considered it an honor to fit a boot to Mr. Webster. The old man was left in the store, and Mr. Webster said he would call around later and pay the proprietor.

The clerk knew that his chief was acquainted with Mr. Webster, and when the proprietor arrived informed him of the sale with a great deal of pride.

The proprietor complimented the Bath boy upon the sale, but closed with the remark, "I probably will never receive pay for the boots," and the sale was charged up to the profit and loss account.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.
