CATTLE ARE DYING

STRANGE DISEASE CARRIES OFF GOODMAN'S YEARLINGS.

Dr. J. Christie, Deputy State Veterinarian Will Investigate—Reports Say it is Dropsy, But the Doctor Says Dropsy is Not Contagious—Umatilla County Stock in Excellent Condition This Spring.

Reports from the Hudson Bay district say that Harold Goodman has lost 16 head of yearling calves, with a disease which has been pronounced to be dropsy by Walla Walla veterinarians.

The calves swell up under the breast and in the legs and die in a few days after first becoming afflicted with the disease. From its ravages among Mr. Goodman's cattle it is thought that the disease must be contagious, but Dr. J. Christie, of this city, deputy state inspector, and a member of the state veterinary board, says that dropsy is not contagious, and that this disease is not dropsy, from the report he has heard of it.

Dr. Christie expects to visit the herd immediately, and ascertain the true nature of the disease, and take steps to prevent its spread.

While other herds in that vicinity have not suffered from the disease, it is evident that it is not highly contagious and Dr. Christie does not anticipate anything serious from it.

Stock in Umatilla county are in excellent condition this spring, from the standpoint of health and flesh, and with the exception of a few slight cases of mange, there is no disease of any kind existing in the county.
