Too Fast.
Henry Clews came down from Saratoga on the special a little time ago, when the bears were doing things to stocks on 'change. Mr. Clews was in a hurry. The train made its 60 miles an hour all right, but the financier thought it the slowest train on earth. He said to the conductor, "That dignity, as usual, took the remark as a personal insult. He didn't know the financier. "If you don't like the speed of this train, Mister," he said, "you can get out and walk." Mr. Clews was not crushed. He countered with this: "I would, only they don't expect me till this train gets in."

JAPAN'S ANTIQUATED RULES OF WAR

It is true that the Japanese army which is preparing for a supreme trial of strength with the Russian forces in Northern Korea, or Southern Manchuria is largely inspired by the military science of modern Germany, yet it is a mistake to suppose that the Japanese generals ignore the battle tactics of their own ancient heroes. There are recognized rules of warfare which have been in use in Japan for more than 11 centuries—ideas taken originally from Chinese generals who wrote in the third century after Christ, says James Creelman in the New York World.

The astonishing tactical and strategic intelligence displayed by the Japanese generals who are pitted against the veteran commanders of Russia is supposed to be widely due to the influence of European schools. But a glance at the tactical rules revealed by Japanese warriors in Japan ever since the eighth century reveals principles, offensive and defensive, which, with some modifications, are applied successfully today. Here are some of the ideas set forth in the accepted code of the fighting samurai, copied from the Chinese in the eighth century:

1. An army undertaking an offensive campaign must be twice as numerous as the enemy.
2. The invention of smokeless powder and long-range, small-calibre arms of course, alters that proposition. A force investing a fortress should be numerically 10 times the garrison.
3. Troops for escalade (an attack involving the scaling of walls) should muster five for every one of their foes.
4. When the adversary holds high ground, turn his flank; do not deliver a frontal attack.
5. When he has a mountain or river behind him, cut his lines of communication.
6. If he deliberately assumes a position from which victory is his only escape, hold him there but do not molest him.
7. If you can surround him, leave one route open for his escape.
8. This rule was applied by the Japanese 10 years ago when they allowed the Chinese garrisons to escape at Ping Yang, Tallenwan and Port Arthur, instead of forcing them to make a last desperate stand.
9. The war correspondents who are writing about the conflict in Asia from the viewpoint of the hotels in Tokio have much to say about the bearing and spirit of the mikado's soldiers. But when the correspondents are permitted to see the Japanese forces in the field they will discover an army that marches practically without flags, music or ornamental pomp—a silent, patient, patriotic soldiery which can fight or starve or work without rest and still maintain cheerfulness. These men need no banners of gaudy trappings, no drum-beats or bugle-calls to stir them.

The explanation of this singular quality of the Japanese soldiers is that they inherit the austere traditions of the samurai. Until Japan accepted Western civilization under the compulsion of the American Commodore Perry's guns her men were divided into two classes—the fighters, or samurai, and the bread-winners. The samurai had a swaggering contempt for the workingman which is not wholly absent in the Japanese army today. Indeed, every Japanese military force carries with it in the field a large body of coolies or laborers, who relieve the soldiers from manual toil performed by the troops or other nations. The ordinary proportion today is about one coolie to every two soldiers.

The ancestors of the men who are fighting Russia were for centuries subjected to a discipline which shows its effects now. Take the rules formulated by Kato Kyomasa, one of the two Japanese generals, who conquered Korea 300 years ago. They applied strictly to the samurai of every rank:

1. The routine of service must be strictly observed. From 6 a. m. military exercises shall be practiced. Archery and gunnery must not be neglected. If any man shows greater proficiency than his comrades he shall receive extra pay.
2. Those that desire recreation may engage in hawking, deer-hunting or wrestling.
3. With regard to dress, garments of cotton or pongee shall be worn. Any one incurring debts owing to extravagance of costume or living shall be considered a lawbreaker.
4. The staple of diet shall be un-hulled rice. At social entertainments one guest for one host is the proper limit. Only when men are assembled for military exercises should many dine together.
5. It is the duty of every samurai to make himself acquainted with the principles of his craft. Extravagant displays of adornment are forbidden in battle.
6. Dancing or organizing dances is unlawful; it is likely to betray sword-carrying men to acts of violence. Whatever a man does should be done with his heart. Therefore, for a soldier military amusements alone are suitable. The penalty for violating this provision is death by suicide.

Bright's Disease and Diabetes News.

San Francisco, Oct. 6
To F. W. Schmidt's Pharmacy:

Dear Sirs—There are daily occurrences in this city that ought to be known all over the world. A gentleman old, gentle and octogenarian, a distant relative of Robert Fulton, of first steamship fame, has saved the lives of hundreds (probably thousands) after they were believed to be beyond human aid. His discovery is undoubtedly the long-sought cure for Bright's Disease and Diabetes.

This is not easy of belief, and it is the purpose of a number of business and professional men of this city (of whom I am one) to tell the people. You are hereby authorized to tell all those in your city who have either Bright's Disease or Diabetes, that nearly ninety per cent of them can recover. Among the business men who are giving moral and financial support and who would give neither if the above was not strictly true, are Hon. D. M. Burns, President Caudelaria Mining Company; Edward Miller, President of Bullock & Jones Company; Captain Roberts, President Boca and Loyton R. R. Co.; Thos. Kirpatrick, Capitalist; D. E. Bender, Capitalist; W. C. Price, Capitalist; Wm. Sharp, Capitalist; C. W. Clark, Capitalist, and many others. The pamphlets herewith are to be given to all inquirers without charge. They give the complete history of our long and exhaustive investigation.

Yours truly,
A. E. SHATTUCK,
President Pacific States Type Foundry.
