APOSTLE TAYLOR'S WIFE ON MORMONISM

Mrs. John W. Taylor, first plural wife of Apostle Taylor of the Mormon church, writes the following highly entertaining article for the New York Sunday World:

I am the first wife, the legal wife of Apostle John W. Taylor, and as such I have escaped many of the evil things connected with the polygamous relations. Whatever wives Mr. Taylor may have, and how he may treat them, is no affair of mine, and I do not bother myself about it. Long ago I abandoned any idea of interfering in any of his affairs of this nature. I have no feeling, sterner or otherwise, for Mr. Taylor's other wives. Who they are, what they do, how they conduct themselves, how they are treated by Mr. Taylor—all these things are of little moment to me.

I manage all the business affairs of Apostle Taylor and am heavily interested in various business enterprises myself. The women of Utah long ago secured the right to manage their own business affairs. We are doing so in our own way, and in a majority of instances we are successful.

There is no country on the face of the globe where women are quite so independent as they are in the Mormon country of Utah. We have the franchise and the right to act as we desire in business matters, and there is absolutely no coercion upon us in any manner, shape or form.

It Makes Women Unhappy.

Now, as to this subject of polygamy. I do not consider myself a plural wife in any sense of the term, for the reason that I am the legal wife of Mr. Taylor. Do I believe that the practical application of this doctrine redounds to the happiness of women? Most assuredly I do not. No woman, no matter what her religious belief, can honestly truly and sincerely state that polygamy adds to her happiness. It has the reverse effect.

It is the nature of a woman to love one man and to be loved by one man at a time. The great majority of our men have adopted polygamous practices because of religious conviction. Nevertheless, it is exceedingly hard on the women, who must bear the burden of this so-called inspired doctrine.

I am a Mormon woman. I am the niece of the president of the church; my parents were Mormons and believers in polygamy; I am a member of various women's Mormon societies, and I think I know and can comprehend the feelings of other women of this faith.

And I say to you that there is not one woman among the Mormons who is a plural wife, who does not suffer because of this doctrine of polygamy. There is not one of them who can honestly and truthfully declare that the taking of other wives by her husband has not at least to some extent embittered her life.

We Mormon women, however, accept this doctrine; we accept the fact that the old-timers believed in polygamy and that they entered into that state because of a conviction. We accept the fact as we find it. Polygamy is practically a thing of the past. It is dying, or is dead. You will, of course, find many fanatics connected with every religious denomination, and you will find these among the Mormons, just as you find them among various religious organizations of the East.

I confess that we have them among ourselves; we have people still who believe that polygamy is the command of God himself, and that practically it works out to the advantage of the people. Nevertheless, the doctrine is not accepted by the younger element of the Mormons as to the utilitarian phase of the subject. I think there can be but one conclusion.

"Count Me Out" She Said.

You will find that the polygamous people of Utah are far more moral in many respects than are the people of the East. Certain social evils that are widespread in Eastern communities are practically unknown among our Mormon people who practice polygamy. To that extent the use of the doctrine in practical life is undisputed.

But, as I have already told you, the younger people and more enlightened people among us no longer believe in polygamy. Do you suppose that any of our beautiful girls of Salt Lake City would enter into a polygamous alliance? Emphatically, no! They realize fully what it means to divide the affections of a husband, and under no circumstances would they consent to such a union.

This is but natural, and it is a result of the different environment and education of the present day compared with a quarter of a century ago. Our young people now are thoroughly educated, they travel extensively, they attend the best universities in this country and in Europe, they have absorbed broad, liberal ideas.

It is a mistake for the women of the East to believe that the present-day Mormon women of Utah are bigoted, or that they are adherents of the doctrine of polygamy. I find my life a busy one, as I am extensively interested in commercial pursuits, and I have no time for regrets.

When Mr. Taylor informed me that as a matter of principle, he intended to take another wife, I said, "All right. Count me out." Right then and there we had an understanding that has been lived up to ever since. Mr. Taylor is very seldom at home. I look after his business affairs, and beyond that I am not interested in his doings.

LEWISTON'S CREAMERY.

George D. Goodhue Asks That 600 Cows Be Pledged There.

George D. Goodhue of the Commercial Creamery Co., who has been in the Lewiston country in the interests of a creamery project, will leave this morning for Spokane and the coast where his company has headquarters. Mr. Goodhue states that at this time the prospects for establishing a creamery in this field are not the most favorable, but that later developments may make such step possible.

"What the creamery must have is patronage," said Mr. Goodhue yesterday to the Lewiston Tribune, "and at the present time it does not seem that a sufficient number of cows can be secured to make the industry profitable either to the patrons of the company.

"In establishing a cream route it is necessary to secure a sufficient number of cows to reduce the cost to the minimum and an obstacle has been met in every community.

"Our company would require 600 cows before a creamery will be established and no company can enter the field and successfully operate with less than this number. At the present time there are about 300 cows pledged for the creamery and this number is so badly scattered that not one route can be satisfactorily designated.

warrant the installing of the plant we will enter the field here before the end of the season."
