INTERESTING RAIROAD CAREER

M. J. Buckley, Assistant Superintendent of the O. R. & N., Has Filled Many Positions.

Perhaps M. J. Buckley, assistant superintendent of the O. R. & N. at La Grande, has had one of the most remarkable railroad careers of any man on the Pacific coast.

He began railroading as a brakeman, and his first service on the O. R. & N. was in that capacity, about 20 years ago. He was successively a telegraph operator, assistant dispatcher, chief dispatcher, and finally assistant superintendent, with a good opportunity to be superintendent if the changes in the Harriman system should promote J. P. O'Brien to the management of some other division of the great system.

Mr. Buckley is familiar with the actual work of every department, from the handling of a brake club on a box car to the promulgation of rules for the conduct of officials, and while he has never run an engine, except on rare instances, just to try his nerves, he knows all the details of that department.

His promotion from one position of trust to another has been rapid, and his successive steps have not turned his head, but the employe finds him today the same considerate, approachable man that he was when one of the ranks of the train department or the telegraph office.

In the spring man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love, but not so with all men. Some of them want a new necktie, or a new suit of clothes, but no matter what it is that a man wants, clothing or men's furnishing goods, he will find the clothing headquarters at the Peoples Warehouse.
