THE INDIAN'S DRESS

SECOND-HAND CLOTHING IN DEMAND IN PENDLETON.

Indians Buy Many Second-Hand Goods—No Attention Paid to Fit, Just so the Clothes Cover Nakedness—Old Indian Woman Buys Two Coats and Puts Them Both on at Once—Dry Goods Clerks Are Indians' Dressfitters.

Pendleton handles more second-hand clothing than any other city in Eastern Oregon, because of the strong demand for such articles from the Indians. The better class of Indians would scorn to wear a second-hand suit, no matter what towering lawyer or shining minister had worn it, but the class of swashes that is always out of money, and always hanging on the charity of friends and acquaintances, are often glad to get any kind of rags to cover their nakedness and keep up an appearance.

The second-hand stores all do a thriving business in clothing of every description. Two soiled coats brought in from the tenderloin district only hung in the window of a local second-hand shop one day, until they were purchased by an old Indian woman, who put both of them on her back and mounted her horse for the reservation.

The coats had been elegant specimens in their day, costing new perhaps $50 each, but they had been worn several winters and the warm spring days, caused them to be discarded, when they were pawned for a pittance at the second-hand store, never to be redeemed.

It is not an unusual sight to see a short Indian wearing a long "Prince Albert" and moccasins, with a slouch hat covering his face. On a very cold day, he will wear a blanket over the "Prince Albert," foregoing the pleasure of appearing in public properly robed, for the protection of his thin body from the chilling winds.

The class of Indians that rent their lands and husband their rent money, buy nothing but new goods. Little attention is paid to fit, but the cloth is new, at least. There is often a grotesque and ludicrous aspect in the make-up of the Indian dress. Very few of them employ the dressmaker to fit their clothes, leaving this task to the kindly offices of the dry goods clerks, whose tastes vary as much as the Indian's, usually.

POLICE COURT.

Vagabond and Roughouser Will Be the City's Guests.

The city court had an easy time this morning, as there were but two men before it, and both easy to handle.

H. C. Wilson was arrested yesterday afternoon charged with vagrancy. He had been making a house-to-house canvass for old clothes which he sold to the second-hand dealers, and spent the proceeds for whisky.

By afternoon he had managed to accumulate quite a jag and was locked up. This morning he was invited to be the city's guest for five days.

James Lamont started a rough house in the Louvre yesterday evening, and was put in the lock-up for his fun. This morning he was fined $5, but being unable to pay went to jail for three days.

WILL NOT GO TO BAKER CITY.

Pendleton Knights Templar Will Spend Easter at Home.

At the meeting of the Pendleton Commandery No. 7, Knights Templar, held last night, a cordial invitation was read from the Eastern Oregon Commandery No. 5, of La Grande, extending the Pendleton knights the hospitality of the city, and asking them to join with the Baker City commandery in celebrating Easter in La Grande.

It was decided, however, that since this was the farewell service of Rev. W. E. Potwine, that the commandery would remain in Pendleton, and accordingly the knights will attend the Easter services at the church of the Redeemer tomorrow night at 7:30, in a body.

ENGINEER COULDN'T HEAR.

Doctor Plays a Mean Joke on O. R. & N. Emloyee at La Grande.

"Do you think I am a dry goods clerk?" said an old engineer who has pulled a passenger train on the O. R. & N. for the past 10 years, to Dr. Bacon at La Grande yesterday, as the doctor presented a skein of var-colored yarn to the old man, to test his knowledge of colors.

"I know a red right from a white light, when I see them out on the switches, but I can't pick out all the dumfuzzling colors in a tangled skein of yarn."

"If this is your physical examination, you can have my hide. I am not up in yarns. I can see as far as anybody, and hear as well as I could 20 years ago, but you can stick me on this yarn guessing contest."

The old man finally admitted that he couldn't hear out of his left ear, after the doctor had held a dumb watch to his ear, for several seconds, in giving him the ear test. No wonder he couldn't hear the watch tick. The doctor didn't expect him to, because it was not ticking, but the old engine driver thought his left ear was poor and was honest enough to admit it. He said he could hear it all right with his right ear.

The eye tests and color tests are given by exhibiting a skein of yarn containing all the various colors, and causing the employe to pick out and name the different colors, and shades of each color. It is a most difficult task to do, and many old women who have knit stockings all their lives would be staggered at the brilliant array of colors in the skein.

Eagles' Big Doins.

The Eagles' band was on parade this afternoon to call the attention of the people to the grand ball which will be held in their hall on Monday night. At the ball six prizes will be given away, three to the three best sustained gentlemen way down East characters, and three to the best three lady characters. The refreshments which will be both good and plentiful, are all included in the first cost of admission, so that the one ticket covers the whole expense. From the present indications the ball will be the event of the season.

Residents along Snake river, above Riparia, fear a repetition of the high water of 1894, this spring, and are making preparations to protect their property by levees wherever possible.
