REV. T. H. B. ANDERSON TELLS OF MORAL CONDITIONS.

Believes Oregon Should Pass the Local Option Law and Give the People the Privilege of Selecting Their Own Surroundings—Shelby County, Missouri, With Population of 20,000 People Has no Saloon—Rev. Anderson Pleas with Pendleton—Visiting His Daughter While Conducting Revival.

Rev. T. H. B. Anderson, whose sermons at the South Methodist revival are attracting deep attention in this city, is an enthusiastic Missourian, and believes that the plans of the Missouri are all right in the end.

He talks entertainingly of the work of the matchless district attorney of St. Louis, Joseph W. Folk, in ridding the state of Missouri and especially the city of St. Louis, of the gang of hoodlums that had grown up and become almost irresistible under legislative corruption. He believes that Folk will be elected governor of Missouri by at least 60,000 majority, because republicans and democrats alike, who love law and order and cleanliness in government will support him.

He is also an enthusiastic believer in the local option law, as now before the people of Oregon, and says the Oregon law is much better than the Missouri local option law, although the highest results have attained under the Missouri law.

In Shelby county, his home county, with a population of 20,000 people, there is not a saloon, and there are few prosecutions of drug stores for selling liquor, as the law is rigid and well enforced.

Instead of each precinct selecting its surroundings, the local option law of Missouri, gives each county that privilege. He believes the people of Oregon can add wonderfully to their moral conditions, by passing this law.

Dr. Anderson is pleased with Pendleton. He has never visited here before, but spent many years in California, where his daughter met and wedded Wesley Matlock, of this city, at whose home Dr. Anderson is now visiting. He may conclude to purchase property here.

The religious sentiment of the state of Missouri, is much stronger than in the West. In that state are over 1,000,000 members of churches out of a population of 4,000,000, but he believes as the frontier aspects wear off of the West and the adventurous spirit gives place to the home building spirit in the West, the religious sentiment will gradually spread over this country as in the East. The revival will last indefinitely, and he will remain until its close.

DELEGATES TO OREGON CITY.

Only Two Members of Pendleton Unions Will Attend.

At the last meeting of the trades unions it was decided to send Win Brown and E. Wisdom to Oregon City as delegates to the state labor convention, which meets on May 2, Monday next. W. G. Hodder was elected an alternate for Mr. Brown, and E. H. Tramplesure as alternate for Mr. Wisdom.

It was at first thought that each union would send a delegate, but owing to the distance, and the fact that most of the members of the various unions would find it inconvenient to leave their work at this time, it was decided that but two men should be sent.

The man who will turn a dishonest trick to get public office will turn a dishonest trick at the expense of his constituents.

FOR WET DAYS OR DRY ONES.

We could tell you a whole lot about these two coats, but, really, what's the use? One is the Spring Covert Coat, with a popularity that forbids discussion. The mere mention of the other's name—The Raincoat—is like the wink to the wise—as good as a nod.

All the information you need know is that Crouse & Brandegee Raincoats are not Mackintoshes. They won't take water, but that's the only thing about them that indicates they're made for rainy days, and for that reason you can wear them any time.

You can make it take the place of the Covert as a spring overcoat, but we don't recommend this, as we would rather sell you both. And, oh! by the way, since we've mentioned the maker's name, we presume you know that there's nothing finer made.

HOMER DAVENPORT NEW ISSUE SPRUNG

A PLAIN TALKER BUT UNEQUALED ARTIST.

His Hold on an Audience Comes From His Sympathetic Language and Temperament and Droll and Skillful Manipulation of the Crayon—Has Two More Appointments in the West and Will Then Return East.

Homer Davenport has come, has made the citizens to laugh with him, and has gone; but he has left behind him an impress on the minds of those who saw and heard him that will remain and be remembered.

The over-crowded house last night found out what some few knew and all were glad to learn, that the Oregon boy did not lecture, he just talked. There was no flight of oratory, no prearranged gesture, no artifice, no calculation in what he said, no striving after effect. The man who has made himself famous with his pencil stood before the people (part of the time with his hands in his pockets,) took them to his heart and into his confidence and told them of the things that had happened to him, the men he had seen, and his experiences in getting the pictures which have made him so well known and so dear to the people of the nation in general, and this state in particular.

One minute he would have the audience holding its sides at his drollery, the next it mourned with him in his pathos. His stories were simply told and were dainty, or strong as he wished. From all points his entertainment was a surprise to many, and an agreeable one at that. The sketches he made were also a surprise, for they were so easily and rapidly done.

Mr. Davenport is an Oregonian. He was born a Webfoot, and wants to remain one in spite of the instinct and the interests that draw him to the East, and this is no more fittingly shown than by the story with which he finished the evening. He told of a man who had a collection of wood ducks which he kept in a specially prepared place surrounded as much as might be with the state of nature to which the fowl were accustomed.

Each new addition to the flock had its wings clipped so that it could not fly over the barrier and away. In all the flock, however, one was carefully clipped, and in time its wing feathers grew again. In the meantime the duck had mated and seemed to be contented with its lot, but as the migratory season came on the keeper noticed that the duck was exercising its wings as though it wanted to fly. He wondered if its impulse would cause it to desert its mate and seek the South with the flocks passing overhead.

The duck from instinct rose in the air, and unheeding the cries of his mate, soared higher and higher until he joined a passing flock and passed out of sight towards the South. The owner said, "Instinct is stronger than love; but one day not long afterwards, the flock gave the cry of warning as a speck came into the sky which, growing larger and larger, resolved itself into the duck returning. He settled into the water and whistled to his mate, who came rushing to meet him. Love had triumphed over instinct and the wanderer had returned from the large world where ambition had free range, to live in the narrow inclosure where love dwelt.

In a couple of days Mr. Davenport will leave for the East, but expects in time to return to Oregon to make his home along with the Silverton band, the country store, and the old folks at home.

VISITED RESERVATION.

Homer Davenport's Father Was Once Agent on Umatilla Reservation.

Homer Davenport, the artist, accompanied by his sister, Miss Dell Davenport, were the guests of the Hotel St. George. They left this afternoon on the delayed train for The Dalles, where Mr. Davenport will lecture this evening.

During the day Major Lee Moorhouse and W. H. Babb took the visitor over the reservation and out to visit the racing stable owned by Frank Frazier. T. W. Davenport, the father of the cartoonist, was formerly the agent of the Umatilla reservation, so that the visit to that place had an added interest to the son, who took away with him a large assortment of Indian pictures taken by the major.

He returned home on the evening train.

CLOSING HOURS AGAIN SUBJECT OF DISPUTE.

Grocers Wish to Keep Open Longer Hours From May 1 on—Clerks' Union Willing to Compromise on June 1, and is Circulating a Petition to Interest Other Merchants and the General Public.

There is a little difference of opinion among the business men and the clerks, and among some of the merchants and the grocers, and an effort is being made this afternoon to settle the trouble without any unpleasant feelings being engendered or retained.

The ultimatum has gone forth from the Grocers' Association that on and after May 1 (commencing Monday evening next) the grocery stores of the city will remain open until 7 o'clock during the month of May, and until 8 o'clock for the rest of the summer season. This statement is the cause of the trouble, and the clerks are seeking some way to persuade the association that it is making a mistake.

It is a certainty that if the grocers open the other merchants will follow suit, for they are all nearly equally concerned. If the grocers do business after union hours, then the department stores handling groceries must necessarily do the same. If these stores remain open the exclusive dry goods men will make a kick and open their doors, and the town will then all be open.

This is the view that the clerks take of it, and they are circulating a petition this afternoon among the citizens and business men asking them to extend their support in persuading the grocers to remain closed after 6 o'clock through the month of May, after which the clerks will be willing to work until 8 o'clock during the remainder of the summer season. This petition will be presented to the Grocers' Association, and the clerks hope that public sentiment will be such that the association will accede to their wishes.
