THEY MADE CANOES

THIS IS A TRADITION OF NEZ PERCE INDIANS.

Lewis and Clark Hewed Their Boats
From Trees and the Older Indians Insist That the Stumps of the Trees Used for the Purpose Can Yet Be Found Buried Beneath Sand and Gravel on the Clearwater.

"Jack" Greer, one of the earliest pioneers of the Clearwater country, returned to his home in Greer yesterday after spending several weeks in Clarkston where he has received treatment for rheumatism, says the Lewiston Tribune. Mr. Greer came to the Clearwater river country at the time of the placer stampede to Idaho.
He states that the old Indians of the country in the early days often discussed the coming of Lewis and Clark party relative to the camp that was established at the mouth of the North Fork, opposite the present site of Ahsahka.

"The white people were a great enthusiasm to the Indians," said Mr.
Greer yesterday, "and a colored servant of the party was a great mystery. The party of white people with the colored servant was first discovered by the Nez Perces near the Weip-pe plains, but it was several days before the Indians made the acquaintance of the strange visitors.

"Captain John and Chief Lawyer's fathers, then boys, were the first of the Nez Perce tribe to form the acquaintance of the whites and as soon as the other members of the tribe then in that part of the country realized that the strangers were friendly the older Indians approached the camp and agreeable relations were soon established. The Indians accompanied the party to the camp opposite the present site of Ahsahka and were there while the white people were camped at that place.

"When the party started down the Clearwater river several of the Indians accompanied them to the camp where Lewiston now stands and Captain John's father and the father of Chief Lawyer continued with the party to the Columbia and as far down that stream as the Cascade locks."

Mr. Greer knows nothing of the building of the boats at the mouth of the North Fork, but states that the party had traveled overland to that point and by boats the rest of the way. If the party did build boats at this camp the Indians would have known it and on account of the deep interest would have remembered the circumstances surrounding the boat building.

Some of the old Indians of the tribe state that the party did build boats at the junction of the two rivers and further state that the stumps of the trees from which the boats were constructed are now covered with about two feet of soil and gravel but can be located at a small cost.

As told by the Indians the boats were canoes, dug out by the white people, but the work was accomplished in such a remarkably short time compared with the tedious process employed by the Indians that the feat aroused much interest in the tribe.

The old stumps were shown to the children of the next generation and the works of the white people related as early history of the tribe in connection with the first coming of the white people. It is these children who are now the old men of the tribe who propose to guide the party of searchers to the location of the old stumps and it is believed they will be successful.

The softest snap usually winds up by presenting the biggest expense account.
