France Reveres Her Journalists

"There is no place on the face of the earth where the genuine journalists and newspaper men are as highly respected or have many favors shown them as in Paris," says Carlo Maria Count de Foras, one of the foremost editors and correspondents of the French republic and a disciple of the Henri Rochefort school of journalism, who has just been on a trip through the United States, and is now in Mexico. In comparing the conditions of journalism in France to America, he says:

"I have traveled through the United States and have made thorough observations of the effect of the American papers upon the public, but I must say that the influence of the papers of Paris upon public opinion far outweighs that of the journals of the leading cities of the United States. One can not realize the extent to which their influence is felt, unless he has lived in Paris, and felt the public pulse through its various vibrations.

"The life of the Paris newspaper man who attends strictly to his duties is one which is to be envied. He receives a magnificent salary, has excellent opportunities to replenish his pocketbook through contributions to his paper, for which he receives extra compensation, and lives and works as a part of the body of the journalists in the great capital.

"There is a press club at which all the newspaper men congregate for their meals, and which is for their exclusive use. There, at almost any hour, one may find congenial associates, all of them gentlemen of education and refinement. A man is well tested before he is admitted to membership in the club, for he must have had a probation of three years in Paris, and his qualifications as a gentleman must be of the soundest nature.

"There is one thing about the French journalist which I think has a great deal to do with the high standing he maintains in his country and that is, that he must be a man of education. He must be possessed of a good literary style in order to enter the ranks, and in addition it is almost necessary that he be a college or university graduate or have had experience which has been calculated to give him thought training.

"Accuracy and truthful assertions are absolutely essential to the success of the newspaper men there, as everywhere, but he must be a person who is so entirely reliable as to his assertions that his copy can be handed to the machine operators without the slightest revision by the copy readers or editors.

"When he has demonstrated that this standard has been attained, there is nothing too good for him. As a member of the club he may enjoy all its privileges and by the payment of its dues he may be entitled on retirement from active service, to a reasonable pension. Thus his latter years are always assured of a comfortable end, for his former associates take care of him.

"But these are only a few of the privileges of newspaper men in Paris. They have the entree to the best society, and at all the places of amusements there are boxes especially reserved for the press. These are never sold, and, no matter what the event, there is always a box in every theater for the press every night of the year. At the buildings where the session of the National Deputies are held, there is a press gallery, which is reserved and never invaded by any person outside of the fold.

"The crowning virtue of the life of the newspaper man in Paris is his ability to get the news and the most accurate reports through the police. The law requires absolutely that in case of a crime of any sort, the first duty of the prefect of a police department, after the crime has been discovered, is to notify the papers through a gendarme, who goes to the office and makes a report of the crime.

"Thus all the papers receive a simultaneous report of the crime, and reporters are sent at once to the scene at once. The newspaper men get all their reports in common, and compare notes, so that there is absolutely no question as to the accuracy of their statements, and then return to their respective papers to make their reports.

"Thus there is always a feeling about the craft which the more closely cements their relations as professional men, and makes them, as I said the hall of wool, bound together by the strongest of ties of business and personal affinity."

THE DALLES MURDERER.

Norman Williams is Now Anxious for a Speedy Execution.

D. Norman Williams, the man sentenced to be hanged on the 22d of this month, seems to be perfectly indifferent to his fate, and since a stay of proceedings has been decreed by the supreme court, there is no apparent change in his actions, says The Dalles Chronicle.

He refuses to be interviewed regarding the crime of which he has been found guilty, and if he indulges in any conversation, it is about ordinary affairs, and carefully avoids any reference to the murder of the Nesbitt women.

He has received a letter from the brother of Alma Nesbitt, begging him in the most pathetic manner to disclose what became of the bodies of the victims of his diabolical crime, but this does not affect him in the least. If he is hanged, and it is very likely he will be, the details of the terrible crime will go down with him to the grave.

He has been visited by persons of religious inclination, who have prayed with him; but recently he expressed a desire not to receive visits from preachers of any religious denomination.

After taking his exercise in the corridor of the jail he retires to his cell, where he spends his time reading religious books, and one in particular he has read through four times.

After perusing the contents, he told the jailer that anybody who would read that book and not be thoroughly convinced of the absolute truth of Christianity was beyond hope. Frequently he can be heard reading the Bible, and sometimes apparently praying.

He has expressed the desire that his fate be definitely settled as quickly as possible, and if he were to be hanged he didn't care how soon it might happen, as he was becoming tired of the suspense.

HONOR JAUREZ'S MEMORY.

He Was One of the Founders of the Republic of Mexico.

City of Mexico, July 18.—The memory of Benito Juarez, the liberal party president, and one of the founders of the republic, was honored today as usual by memorial exercises on the occasion of the anniversary of his birth. A long procession marched to the cemetery of San Fernando wherein lie the remains of the illustrious soldier, who led the successful struggles against the Maximilian empire.

The participants in the celebration included representatives of scientific bodies, workmen's societies, members of the liberal patriotic committees and members of the federal, district and city government. The speakers included President Diaz, Senor Corral, the new vice-president of the republic, members of the cabinet and a number of other public men.

Brutally Tortured.

A case came to light that for persistent and unmerciful torture has perhaps never been equaled. Joe Gobolick of Colusa, Cal., writes: "For 15 years I endured insufferable pain from rheumatism and nothing relieved me though I tried everything known. I came across Electric Bitters and it's the greatest medicine on earth for that trouble. A few bottles of it completely relieved and cured me." Just as good for liver and kidney troubles and general debility. Only 50c. Satisfaction guaranteed by Tallman & Co., druggist.

Fearful Sandstorm.

Condon had a fearful sandstorm on the first, the worst ever experienced in this country. Covering a space from east to west as far as the eye could see, a great wave of dust suddenly arose from a southerly direction and enveloped the town and surrounding country for about an hour. Several hundred people who were at the ball grounds were forced to remain on the grounds, huddled up with their mouths closed and backs to the storm, until it subsided. Some almost died from suffocation, and it was almost providential that no accidents took place.—Prineville Journal.

Kicking About Sheep.

Sheep are crowding in on the range of some of the mine operators with persistence, and there is marked activity among mining men and the management of the Sumpter Water Company this week to keep the pest off territory where they do not belong. The water company heard that several bands were ranging in on McCully's fork, this side of Baldy mountain, but further investigation failed to prove it. Tom C. Gay came in through that section Thursday to learn if there were really sheep where indicated, and, while finding a little sign, did not find the herds reported, and believes that the matter has been exaggerated somewhat.—Sumpter American.

I have moved my shop to the door east of the Savings Bank, pairing of all kinds done in a manlike manner at reasonable prices.
