INDIAN SUMMER DAYS.

First of the Hazy, Cloudy, Lazy "Dog Days" Season.

The heavy, smoky haze, peculiar to the Northwest at the beginning of Indian summer, and occasioned by burning forests, has commenced to spread its pall over Pendleton. This morning for the first time this summer, the mountains were obscured by the smoke, and the rays of the sun occasioned that strange, languid, half-uncomfortable feeling that in early spring is said to denote laziness.

The dog days are "in session" and the small boy hies himself more often to the fast disappearing swimming hole, while his older brother is enjoying the board walk at the sea coast or the cool shade of some mountain resort.

The first of August generally sees the return of a number of persons from their vacations. There are those who always go early to the mountains or coast and are obliged to return home just as the weather is getting in its hottest work. Then, while they toil and sweat and drink nice cool beverages with mint and other vegetables in them, the man who took his vacation late in the season is denying himself those luxuries, cooks salty bacon over a smoky fire and expresses pity for his less fortunate neighbor.

Heavy Yield for Pilot Rock.
Levi Eldridge, of Pilot Rock, has threshed 3700 sacks of wheat from 250 acres—an average of approximately 32 bushels to the acre, and the quality is excellent. This is an unusually heavy yield for the Pilot Rock country, which is not accounted strong on wheat. Off 110 acres of barley, Mr. Eldridge threshed 1699 sacks—an average of approximately 34 bushels to the acre.
