COSTLY LANTERNS.

The Fancy Lamps That Passenger Conductors Used to Carry.

Modern railroadings have driven the passenger conductor's lantern almost out of use. Years ago the pride of a passenger conductor was his lantern. Then the cars were not so brilliantly illuminated as they are now, and the ticket taker was obliged to carry his light on his left arm in order to see the pastebards as he passed through the dimly lighted car. At one time the conductors indulged in considerable extravagance in the matter of lanterns. Some of them were gold and silver plated. The upper part of the glass globe was colored blue, and the name of the owner was cut in old English letters. At the meetings of the Conductors' association manufacturers would arrange a great display of costly lights at one of the hotels in the city in which the meeting would be held. Some of the conies in the lights were unique, and the prices ranged from $25 to ten times that figure. The glass and plating were kept in a highly polished state, and none dared go meddling with this part of the ticket puncher's equipment. Conductors still carry their own lanterns—that is, they are on the train ready for use—but there is nothing like the need of them that formerly existed. —Chicago Tribune.

WIFE BY CHANCE.

How a California Miner Stumbled Across a Helpmeet.

A resident of Orville, Cal., tells of a curious incident he once witnessed in Carson City, Nev. Many immigrants were coming into the state and several camps were made in the vicinity of Carson.

A large number of visitors had congregated about the camps one day, talking with the different ones who had just crossed the plains. The center of one group was a handsome, well-made girl of 19 or 20, who was cooking supper. On a bed of coals was a large coffee pot in which coffee for her party was being made. Suddenly the coals beneath the coffee pot gave way and down the latter came, spilling the beverage.

The girl became angered, and, giving the coffee pot a kick, turned to some half dozen or more men who were standing by, and said: "I am tired of this life, anyway. Some of you men bid up and you shall have me. I want to quit this way of living." Most of the men supposed she was joking, but one who was some years older than the others, said:

"If you are in earnest I will be the man." "Certainly I am in earnest," was the reply of the girl. "Bring on the parson and I will convince you." A minister was soon found, and the couple were married at once. The groom proved to be one of the wealthiest in that part of the state, and shortly afterward built his wife a residence that cost over $60,000. For a wedding tour they made a trip to Europe.

"I done it with my little hatch it," said the hen mournfully as she gazed at her brood of downy ducklings.

Romance in Real Life

Obeying, after a lapse of two years, the strange request of her dying husband, Mrs. Gustav Rix last week sought in Bronx park, New York, the spot most cherished by the celebrated naturalist and there scattered to the four winds, one-half of his ashes.

When the urn containing the other half of the ashes is taken to Germany in a few weeks, and its remaining contents are scattered in the botanical gardens of Cologne, the weird request of the naturalist will have been fulfilled.

It is now over two years since Gustav Rix died at his home in Bedford park. His wife accepted the strange trust he had made before his death, concerning the disposal of his remains, as the last expression of that absorbing love of nature she had never fully understood in her husband, and tearfully consented to carry out his wishes.

Her heart failed her and for two years she did not carry out her husband's request. Recently she moved and looked into the great chest for the urn. It was gone. She found it on a rafter in the attic of her old home. How to get out of the box which had been unopened for two years no one knows.

Firmly believing that the strange disappearance of the urn was a sign of her husband's displeasure, she determined to delay no longer in carrying out his wishes.

Gustav Rix was born in Germany and it was in the great botanical gardens of Cologne that his inherent love of plant and animal life was manifested, and his early studies began. In 1880 the young scientist came to America, and six years later he married Miss Mary Sprossig. Although it was necessary to support his family by working as a cigarmaker, the young scientist never lost his enthusiasm, and all of his spare time was devoted to study of insect life on the Bronx.

As a result of his careful experiments in cross breeding, the Rix butterfly which feeds upon the leaves of the willow tree and an American species that gained its substance from shoots of green corn. He made one of the largest collections of butterflies in the country which, at his death, was given to the Bronx botanical gardens.

Believing that the happiest moments of his life had been spent in the botanical gardens of Cologne and the Bronx, the scientist longed to know that all of him which was mortal might forever rest in those two earthly paradises he had known.

Cattle and Hog Deals.

Conrad Platzoeder has within the past three days bought 50 head of fat hogs of W. Card, of Tutulla, and 50 head of McElroy, who lives four miles east of town, on the reservation, and 15 head of fat cattle of the Owensens, on Camas prairie, and 25 head of fat cattle of Jack Brigham, who lives east of town a few miles. The bunch from the Camas country are said to be about the finest alfalfa feds ever put on the market here. The Brigham bunch were grain fattened and would pass muster as full-fed grains in any Eastern market.

Excursion Train Possible.

If 150 people signify their intention of going to Walla Walla on the 17th over the O. R. & N., to see the Ringling circus, Agent Wolfe is reasonably certain that a special train can be secured for their benefit, with a round trip rate of $1. If the requisite number of excursionists do not go, the round trip rate will be $1.30. The trip to be made in both directions by the regular trains.

PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Friendly Contest in Sight for the Office of President.

The Oregon Press Association will be held at Hood River this year during the fruit fair. The latter will open on Thursday, October 15, and will close on the 20th, says the Salem Statesman.

President Moorhead has decided to call the annual meeting of the state association for Friday and Saturday, the 14th and 15th. A letter will soon be sent out to the press of the state inviting all to be present and participate in the deliberations of the body. The citizens of Hood River promise a grand time to all members of the press who attend.

It is quite probable in view of the approaching convention of the state association, that a meeting of the Salem Press Club will be called in the near future by President A. W. Prescott for the purpose of discussing the matter of the choice of presidency of the state association, to succeed President Moorhead, as it was virtually understood at the last meeting which was held in this city, that the next president should be elected from the local press club. As it is quite probable that the next meeting of the state association will be held in Portland, upon the occasion of the Lewis and Clark fair, it is presumed that there will be somewhat of a local contest for the honor to be conferred thereby.
