F. H. NEWELL CONDEMNNS IRRIGATION FRAUDS.

Says Many of the Large Private Concerns in the West Are Rank Frauds—Stock is Being Sold to Boom Lands Improbable of Reclamation—Competent Business Men Often Bite Hardest.

Three hundred engineers, surveyors and helpers in the irrigation reclamation service are out in the field studying and planning for irrigation projects in the great West. Some few are superintending the actual construction of huge dams and canals. Mr. Newell himself, the head of the service, has just returned to Washington from a somewhat extensive western trip. He reports great interest throughout the West in the big works proposed by the government, but sounds a note of warning against numerous schemes and frauds which are being foisted upon various localities as a result of the great interest aroused through national irrigation activities, says a special Washington correspondent of the Chicago Chronicle.

"There are many instances of honest, effective and legitimate irrigation works," he said, "where the settlers themselves, or their capital to some extent, have gone in and built the works, owning or controlling them along with the reclaimed land, but I do not know of any of the big private irrigation schemes which are what might be called legitimate development enterprises. They are exploited probably more for selling stock and bonds than for watering land."

"It is singular, too, how many men of ordinary hard business sense will go into these wildcat schemes."

"A successful grocer, for instance, who, one would naturally think, would find out every detail of a new business, will draw his checks for some irrigation stocks or bonds in the most trustful manner—paying for an investment regarding which he knows absolutely nothing, can find out nothing and which is as problematical in its returns as the voracious wildcat mine."

"Other people make personal investigations. They go over the land to be reclaimed and having investigated they confidently invest, even though a tract of 50,000 acres is to be reclaimed with a water supply insufficient for 5000 acres."
