My neighbor hath a little field,
Small store of wine its presses yield,
And truly but a slender hoard
Its harvest brings for barn or board.
Yet, though a hundred fields are mine,
Fertile with olive, corn and vine;
Though autumn piles my garners high,
Still for that little field I sigh.
For, ah, methinks no other where
Is any field so good and fair,
Small though it be, its better far
Than all my fruitful vineyards are.
Amid whose plenty sad I pine—
"Ah, would that little field were mine!"

Large knowledge void of peace and rest,
And wealth with pining care possess—
These by my fertile lands are meant,
That little field is called Content.
—Robertson, Trowbridge in Scribner's.

The gain of 25 per cent in the democratic vote of Maine, against a republican gain of but 15 per cent since 1888, shows that the balance is tipping the democratic direction, in Maine as well as in Arkansas. This compensates for the democratic slaughter in Vermont.

The brazen inhumanity of the Portland automobile is driving the metropolis to the extreme of passing rigid ordinances, regulating the conduct and speed of the machines. Visitors to Portland are impressed with the recklessness of the chauffeurs running at a high rate of speed through busy streets, the defiant blast of their horns causing people to take to shelter as if nothing but the automobile had a right to use the streets. Before the city fills up with thousands of visitors next season, Portland should regulate the auto. The record of accidents caused by reckless driving is no inviting advertisement. Railroad engineers who might be reckless to half such an extent would be roasted to a finish by the press of Portland.

The empty nonsense of calling "peace congresses," while voting away the substance of the people for increased war preparations, disgusts the thinking taxpayers, who really love peace and despise war. What really conscientious ruler, having the highest interest of his people at heart could respect a call for a peace conference, coming from a country whose leading ambition is to keep alive the war spirit by spending millions in sham battles and useless warships? The fever of The Hague should not be repeated again. The right hand of the czar wrote a call for that international talker, while his left hand was sharpening a knife for rapine and conquest. The devil should not be tolerated further. Be honest and quit this international lying. Nobody believes the peace talk.

Who remembers a presidential campaign within six weeks of the election that is as barren of enthusiasm and acumen as this campaign of 1917? The stay-at-home vote in Oregon will perhaps be greater than ever. No keen issue spurs the voter to action. Crops are good, times are prosperous, and the tendency to lie back in the harness and drift listlessly is seen everywhere. Wheat prices can get a crowd on a street corner, but politics, never this fall. Is it a fact that the people are actually losing interest in the national contests? Is the fire of the Blaine-Cleveland campaign totally extinguished. In those memorable campaigns of 20 years ago, every farmer was an orator and the voter who had not made a campaign speech from the goods box rostrum in the street, was the exception.

The most disheartening feature of the Russo-Japanese war, aside from its terrible loss of life, is the fact that the European powers will interfere about the time Japan wins, and prevent her from taking the just trophies of the contest. The powers watch the carnage during its progress; they assume a listless neutrality while the battle is raging, but after the millions have been squandered and hundreds of thousands of lives sacrificed, they will then deny the winner the privilege of taking over his winnings. For fear of Japan becoming a master in the east, and to prevent the passing of large Chinese interests to that country, it is safe to say that Japan will be prevented from holding Russian territory or taking her just commercial rights in Korea. It is disheartening to think that all this carnage must be absolutely in vain. The powers are so jealous of each other's advances in the Orient, that Japan will certainly be held in restraint and although she drives Russia from Manchuria and Korea, and takes every Russian stronghold in the East, in the final settlement, the neutral nations will unite to deny Japan her rightful reward for fear she becomes too powerful.

The Lewiston Tribune sarcastically refers to President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance and his past performances, as follows: Considering the rather primitive form of argument adopted by the president in his letter of acceptance, his plea is skillful, specious and strong. The pharisees of old were accustomed to the interrogative line of defense, such as "Do I not pay tithes?" "Are not my prayers in the synagogue, long and loud?" "Have I beaten my wife?" Yet while no transgression of the letter was proven, the affirmative service was not such as the spirit of the law demanded. Take, for example, the trust question. The president treats the subject as one wholly disposed of by his administration and points to his performances, not to his promises or to any future line of conduct, as evidence of the efficiency of his works. On the other hand, the democratic party is viciously assailed by the republican press for alleged friendship for the trusts and for receiving trust funds for use in the campaign. But if President Roosevelt has done his duty, as he says he has (there are no trusts left—at least, there are no bad ones).

THREE PEAKS IN VIEW.

At a point on the O. R. & N. railway near mile post 198, four miles west of Foster, the track passed over a ridge known by railroad men as the summit of Maxwell hill. For about a quarter of a mile, on the top of this ridge, three mountain peaks in the distant Cascades can be seen from the train. Mt. Hood, Mt. Adams and Mt. St. Helens.

It requires but a few minutes to pass over the ridge and the day must be bright and clear to give a view of the white peaks, 175 miles away. The three mountains cannot be seen from the train—Mt. Hood, Mt. Adams and Mt. St. Helens on the north side.

The best view can be obtained from the engine on the train, the three snow-capped peaks appearing in a milk straight ahead of the engine. It is one of the most beautiful and refreshing views seen along the entire line in Eastern Oregon and every O. R. & N. engineer on the mountain division looks for a glimpse of these landmarks in passing over the narrow ridge of Maxwell hill.

Guy C. Stillings, a diamond lottery fiend, has been arrested in Boston. His operations included signing contracts for the purchase of valuable diamonds on the installment plan. In the past six months he has written over $1,000,000 in bogus contracts and has drawn the first payment ranging from $1 to $10 per contract.

OFFENSIVE CATARRH

I suffered for a long time with a bad case of Catarrh, and took a great deal of medicine without any benefit. I had a continual headache, my cheeks had grown purple, my nose was always stopped up, my breath had a sickening and disgusting odor, and I coughed incessantly. I heard of your S. S. S. and wrote you. I commenced to use it, and after taking several bottles I was cured and have never since had the slightest symptom of the disease. MISS MARY L. STORM, Cor. 7th & Felix Sts., St. Joseph, Mo.

Wheeling, W. Va., May 29, 1903. I had Nasal Catarrh for years for which I used S. S. S. with very gratifying results. I tried local applications for some time, and getting no permanent relief I came to the conclusion that the seat of the trouble was in the blood. Knowing S. S. S. to be a good blood medicine I began its use, and after using it for some little while it did away entirely with the offensive mucus in the nostrils, and I did not have to hawk and spit, especially in the morning, to dislodge the catarrhal matter. 1627 South St. FRED H. PRESSY.

The filthy secretions and foul mucus that are continually dropping back into the throat, find their way into the stomach and are absorbed into the blood. Catarrh then becomes constitutional, and the only way to get rid of it is through the blood. Write us if you have Catarrh, and our physicians will advise you without charge.

ANOTHER SOCIAL MISSIONARY.

The college woman has been accused of neglecting her duty to the race, of developing her brain at the expense of her primary physical functions, of feminizing American education and of disturbing the intellectual balance of the sexes.

A new indictment has now been framed against her. Elizabeth Banks, writing in the North American Review, complains bitterly that the educated American woman makes herself a household drudge. This poor misguided creature, it appears, keeps her home in order, does her own housework when it is necessary, takes care of her children, mends their clothes, scrubs their little faces, gets her husband's dinner, reads her Horace at the original and defies emancipation.

It is a sad case but we fear there is no help for it. One of the curious notions acquired by the educated American woman is that she knows her own business and is not in need of gratuitous advice as to how she shall order her life. As long as she persists in being a stiff-necked and haughty generation, the efforts of well-meaning missionaries to save her from herself are worse than wasted. —New York World.

CURED WHEN OTHERS FAILED
1056 Wimmema Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 26, 1902.
Wine of Cardui can always be relied upon to cure when everything else fails. It is a certain cure for female diseases in their worst forms. I suffered for years with ulceration. Intense pains in the womb and ovaries and dreadful headaches unlit me for my work. Finally I grew so ill that I had to keep to my bed. The pains were so intense at times as to cause spasms and a disagreeable discharge drained my life forces. In my extremity after all else had failed, I tried Wine of Cardui. After using it for two weeks I began to improve so rapidly that I felt encouraged to keep up the treatment, which I did for eight teen weeks, but at the end of that time I was entirely cured. What a relief was mine and how new and beautiful life looked through such a siege of sickness as I have will understand how much I value Wine of Cardui. It is indeed a boon to sick women.
