PIONEER SUICIDES. Aged Man Takes the Carbolic Acid

Route.

Ashland, Or., Sept. 21.-Joseph Robinson, an Oregon pioneer of the 50s, committed suicide here this morning by swallowing an ounce of carbolic acid. A son, with whom he lived, found the old man on the ground in a barn about 7 o'clock, suffering from the poison. He was taken home and aid summoned, but he died about 10 o'clock in great agony. An almost illegible note was found on his ed, reading as follows:

"Good-by to all. Tell the undertaker to bury me on that lot in the Wagner creek graveyard. If anyone knows where it is; if not, any old place will do. Good-by to all. You vill find the money in my pocket at the head of my bed." Seventy dollars was found in the lost one leg, had been despondent for ome time, and had repeatedly threatned to make away with himself.

He was born in Ohio in 1834, and rossed the plains to the Willamette valley in the '50s, settling later in Jackson county. He was at one time well-to-do, but had lost nearly every-thing. He is survived by three sons retries. Shop on Bluff street, near Main.
