NEW FLOUR MILL

FRED WALTERS TO CONSTRUCT NEW BUILDING.

Increase of the Capacity From 100 to 500-Barrel Mill—Completion of the Dam and Other Improvements Marks the Beginning—New Mill Will Be First-Class in Every Particular.

Fred Walters is planning an entirely new mill, to be built on the site of the old mill, or immediately adjoining its site, and to be erected probably next summer. The completion of the dam and deepening of the race a foot and a half will afford him far too much power for the capacity of the present mill, and a new mill of greatly increased capacity will only be in proportion with the improvements now in course of construction.

The new mill is to be of 500-barrel capacity, and equipped from race to tower with the most modern appliances for turning out the highest grade of wheat, rye, barley, oats and corn milled products.

It will be built of the familiar dark red stone which is so profuse in this locality, and an inexhaustible quarry of which Mr. Walters has within a few rods of the present mill. Asked about the actual dimensions of the new mill, aside from its capacity in barrels, Mr. Walters could not say definitely, but remarked:

"Such has been the progress of milling invention for the past decade, that machinery that will do as much and really better work than the best did then, can now be put into a much smaller compass. A mill equipped 15 years ago with the best machinery of that day, to turn out 500 barrels of flour per day is large enough to contain the machinery of the present day that will turn out 2000 barrels per day.

"The inevitable trend of milling invention results in economy of room and force, so that I can say at this time of the new mill, is that it will be built of stone from my own quarry, be equipped with the very latest machinery in every respect, and have 500 barrels capacity per day."

Fred Walters yesterday stepped on a sharp wire nail which pierced the shoe and penetrated deeply into his right foot. The wound is not particularly dangerous, but it is very painful.

FINEST KIND OF CATTLE.

Nebraska Stockman Sees Great Improvement in Quality.

"We have not shipped any fatter cattle from our country since the old days of the open range than we have this year," said Bennet Irwin, who was on the market yesterday with a string of cattle from Gordon, Neb.

"I never saw finer grass and stock of all kinds has been in the best of condition for some time. Another noticeable feature of the range cattle this year is the great improvement in the quality of the stuff.

"My steers averaged only 1050 pounds, but they were choice Herefords, and the feeder buyers went after them like a house on fire. They sold for $3.95, a good figure. We have little ground for complaint at present prices and I think many men who intended to hold the bulk of their cattle over to next year have changed their minds and will ship as soon as they can get the stuff gathered."—Chicago Drovers' Journal.

Was Not "Victimized."

(To the Editor.)—I was not a victim of, nor "victimized" by young Chamberlain. I got back $322 in money and enough property besides to make up the deficit. The fact is I had my suspicions of the young man all the time, and even went to the court house and told the recorder to put on the deed on record until I got return from my wire to Grants Pass bank, but he had already been there and had it recorded, although it had not been in his possession more than 10 minutes. Then I kept track of him until I heard from the bank. I do not want to be hard on Chamberlain, but if he goes unpunished this time he will probably do something worse. He got none the best of me but he might make a "victim" of someone else. Respectfully,
 E. T. WADE.

WOOL SHRINKAGE

SOME VARIATIONS ARE POORLY UNDERSTOOD.

Oregon Wool Sustains the Highest Reputation of Any Western Wool This Year—Idaho Wool Stands Uncommonly High This Year—Utah and Wyoming Do Not Rank With Either Oregon or Idaho—Montana Wool is Good This Year.

The shrinkages of the territorial wools this year are varying considerably. The Utahs, on the average, are heavier this year than last by about 2 per cent. The Wyoming wools are heavier on the average by 3 per cent. The Mantanas are said to be lighter, judging from those which have thus far been seen and examined. Many of them are said to be in better condition also, than last year. The early Arizonas were heavier, as well as defective, and were bought at a lower grease price than last year. The Colorado wools are a little heavier, by 1 to 2 per cent.

The Oregon wools are reported to be lighter and are in fine condition this year. In fact, some claim that it is doubtful if a better clip was ever grown in the state of Oregon.

The Idaho wools are said to be 3 and 4 per cent lighter this year than they were last. It is doubtful, however, if the growers in the sections mentioned were aware of these facts as to comparative shrinkage, before their wools had been contracted for or sold. The Idahos, especially, are said to be in very light and good condition as compared with those of last year, taken as a whole. Such being the case, in view of the grease prices which were paid for many of the heavier wools from other sections, if the latter were actually worth what they brought, the Idahos should have commanded higher prices.

It was not surprising when the writer was told recently by a wool merchant that the Idaho wools were "the best bought wools" of any that had been taken up to that time.

The average grower is ignorant of the variation in the percentage of shrinkage from one season to another. He may not know that his clip shrinks 3 per cent lighter this year than last. He may realize that the wool is fully as well grown; but he is no judge of shrinkages; and consequently is at a disadvantage when dickering as to the price of his clip with expert judges of wool.

The grower, if he receives for his wool a quarter or half a cent per pound more than he did the year before, thinks that he is doing well, and lets the wool go, whereas his wool may be worth fully a cent per pound more; he does not know this, but the buyer knows it.—American Shepherds' Bulletin.
