COMING WHEAT BELT

COMMISSIONER WALKER PLEASUED WITH INTERIOR.

Gilliam County Soil, While It Is Unlike the Volcanic Ash of Umatilla County, Is Yet Very Productive and Can Be Made to Yield Well Under Improved Farming Methods—Mr. Walker Purchased Half Section in Gilliam County and Has Great Faith in the District.

"A portion of Oregon that has an especially bright future," said County Commissioner Horace Walker to the East Oregonian today, "is the central part of the state, now being tapped by the Columbia Southern and the Arlington-Condor railways. While that portion of the state has been handicapped by a lack of transportation facilities, it is now in a fair way to become one of the leading wheat and stock producing districts in the Northwest.

"If those farmers could make money in hauling wheat to a railroad, a distance of 40 to 50 miles, as they have been doing in the past, they can make a very great profit after the road comes to their doors."

Mr. Walker has just returned from a visit to Gilliam county where he looked over the country thoroughly, and was greatly impressed with the prospects ahead of that district.

The soil is altogether different from the Umatilla county soil. It is a heavy black soil, with streaks of rock running through it and there are more springs in the foothills than are found in the wheat belt of Umatilla county.

Mr. Walker purchased a half section of wheat land in Gilliam county, 10 miles from Condon, the county seat. The yield in that section runs from 10 to 25 bushels per acre, and Mr. Walker says it can be greatly increased by better farming methods. The soil is rich in spots, and susceptible to high yields, but the methods of seeding have not brought out the best results.

In many places the land is not plowed for periods of three and four years, the grain being sown on top of the ground and disced in year after year. With deep plowing and up-to-date methods, land that has been producing but 20 bushels under those conditions can be made to produce at least 30 bushels per acre, and even more with continued deep plowing and thorough cultivation, is Mr. Walker's opinion.

GAMBLERS ARE LEAVING.

Crowded Conditions Drive Many Sports to Greener Fields.

Slack business has resulted in the closing of more than half of the dozen or more gambling houses in Pendleton. Since the close of harvest and the exodus of the floating population "trade" at the gambling resorts has fallen off to such a marked degree that many of the tables and wheels have been packed away, to be taken later to greener fields, or to be again operated here, if business so warrants.

"The field was to crowded," remarked the proprietor of a large resort. "The gambling business, like any other, can stand competition, but it got too strong. The closing up of Portland, Baker City and the towns of Union county, caused a large number of gamblers to flock here and you can see the result."

"It was all right during the summer when the town was full of harvesters; all of them with plenty of money."

The lay of the lover and the lay of the hen are widely different, but there is always a lot of senseless cackling just the same.
