BIG HORN DISAPPEARING.

Nevada Awakes to Slaughter of the Prized Mountain Sheep.

Nevada people are greatly concerned over the disappearance of the mountain sheep, once so numerous in their state. To prevent their utter extinction the next congress will be asked to establish a national game preserve. The laws of Nevada have been particularly lax. Game has been killed in season and out of season with impunity. The game warden has been looked upon more or less as a joke. The result of this careless negligence has all but cleared Nevada's game fields of their one-time abundant herds of deer and antelope. The big horn of the hills have been driven from their native haunts and are almost extinct.

The surviving game of Nevada has been living in the south and western portions of the state, where the absence of railroads and other facilities necessary to the chase has given the game of this section virtual protection. But with the building of the Salt Lake road, which leads through the very heart of this once isolated country, the state must now be looked to for protection and if a permanent protectorate is to be established the federal government must take a hand.

Has No Closed Season.

The Nevada solons will be asked to pass stringent game laws when they meet for their regular biennial session the coming winter. At present Nevada gives no protection to the big horn or mountain sheep. The silver state is the only one of the western group where these wonderful and ever-decreasing animals can be killed at any season of the year.
