CZAR A WEAKLING

ANDREW D. WHITE DESCRIBES THE RULER.

Young Man of No Moral Force or Consequence. Absolutely Headless of the Miseries of the People and Under the Malicious Influence of Grand Dukes and Nobles.

The Hon. Andrew D. White, ex-United States ambassador to Russia, writes for Collier's of February 11 on the Russian situation. He describes the czar by saying that at the time of his accession he was a young man, kindly, courteous, speaking English like an Englishman and French like a Frenchman, but with no other qualifications to rule his empire.

To begin with, he differs physically from any of his predecessors since Peter the Great, save possibly the wretched Emperor Paul. He is slight in build, short in stature, undignified in manner. Probably no man ever came to a throne with a greater dislike for all that reigning implies.

Those who had had the best opportunities to observe him agree that he has no ambition, no real knowledge of his empire, no acquaintance with men, no ideas of any value regarding the world at large; that he dislikes all official business and is indifferent to all human beings save his family and a few friends of no moral or intellectual force.

Being thus constituted, he at once fell under the sway of the old reactionary influences and especially of Pobedonostzoff, of his mother, the dowager empress, and of sundry grand dukes immediately about him.

All the evils in progress during the reign of his father now came to a head. The "Russification" of the Baltic provinces, the oppression of the Jews, the massacres of the Chinese upon the Amour and elsewhere, the trampling down of Finland, the plunder of the Armenian church and the giving up of the Armenians to murder and pillage under Turkish misrule—all went on more gayly than ever.

As to Finland, the four emperors who had preceded him since that grand duchy was brought into the empire had been restrained by the oaths taken on their accession, but this young man, under the influence of counselors fanatical and brutal, violated the imperial pledge and his own oath, and thus turned the most loyal and civilized part of his empire into a hotbed of hatred and treason.

Very significant is it to observe that in Finland, which up to his reign had never shown the slightest tendency to anarchism, nihilism, or socialism, the red flag has in these later days been freely displayed.

The present reign has completed the reduction of autocracy to absurdity. For the theory on which autocracy is based is that the monarch, established by divine grace and endowed with divine wisdom, is to do all the thinking for the most enormous empire in the world—for one hundred and forty millions of people of unnumbered races, tongues, religions, institutions and customs. This is the theory which has now collapsed in the face of the whole world. For the last 10 years this work, which would have tasked the genius of Caesar or Napoleon, has been carried on by a young man of less ability and force than would be required of a clerk in a haberdashery.

WHITMAN WON DEBATE.

Oregon Team Went Down to Defeat After a Brilliant Defense of Their Question.

Walla Walla, Feb. 18.—In one of the most hotly contested debates ever held in this city, Whitman won the Northwest intercollegiate debate last night, over the Pacific University team, of Cottage Grove, Or.

The question debated was, "Resolved, that the United States should adopt the Canadian banking laws." Whitman being on the affirmative side. Both teams made a hard fight and exhibited some of the best school forensics ever witnessed in this city, but the Oregon team was somewhat weak in rebuttal, and lost the decision.

The judges were Prof. Robert, of Pullman Agricultural College; Prof. Eldridge, of the University of Idaho, and Judge S. A. Lowell, of Pendleton. Judge Lowell was not able to be present at the debate, however, as he is in Portland. The Whitman debaters were Galus Greensdale, Roy Wolfe and Walter Ellis. The Oregon team included W. B. Shiveley, J. W. Philbrook and A. J. Prideoaux. Mr. Prideoaux is a brother of Mrs. A. J. Owen, of this city.

AGED LEGISLATOR

MEMBER OF CANADIAN SENATE 101 YEARS OLD.

Has Been Prominent in Canadian Politics Over Fifty Years—Was the Author of Free Trade Between the Canadian Provinces as to Their Own Products—Is a Native of Ireland.

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 18.—The Hon. David Wark, a member of the Canadian senate now in session, will observe his 101st birthday tomorrow. Senator Wark is undoubtedly the oldest legislator in the world. For over half a century he has been prominent in Canadian politics. He was appointed a senator when the senate was formed on the confederation of the provinces in 1867, but for over 20 years previously he was a conspicuous figure in the politics of New Brunswick. He introduced legislation into the New Brunswick house which led to the provinces exchanging their natural products free of duty—legislation which had a direct bearing on the confederation of the provinces 20 years later.

Senator Wark is not a New Brunswicker by birth, but he has passed most of his life in that province. He was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1804. Shortly after that event his parents emigrated to Canada. A little bowed down and a trifle feeble, Senator Wark is still remarkably well preserved considering his years, and his speeches in the senate are as lucid and convincing as those of a man of 50 years and younger.

DEATH SEALS A SECRET.

German Scientist Knew How to Preserve the Color of Flowers.

Christopher Ross, scientist and traveler, possessor for 10 years of knowledge of a secret method whereby flowers may be preserved permanently, was stricken last night with paralysis in his room at the Esmond hotel, says the Oregon Daily Journal. His condition is serious enough to cause fears that he will not recover. Relatives in the west are Louis and Richard Ebeling. A brother lives in New York.

About 10 years ago Ross quietly announced that he had perfected a method for the preservation of flowers. He showed a rose blossom that was as fresh in appearance as when it was cut from the bush, but which he declared was two or three years old. He never revealed his secret. He guarded it with such care that his nephews did not even know where he maintained his laboratory.

"I knew my uncle was a man of great education and that he had invented a way to preserve flowers," said Ricard Ebeling, one of the nephews. "He showed me some of his preserved blossoms 10 years ago, and we have seen them often since. At first we paid little attention to the matter, but when the blossoms did not fade, of course we knew that he really had discovered a wonderful secret.

"His movements were mysterious, and I do not know how he maintained himself. He has traveled all over the world, is a great scholar, and yet kept to himself all the fruits of his studies. I have known of three visits he made to Europe in the past few years, and he has traveled widely at other times."

A few years ago Ross sold to the Historical Society his collection of shells and curios, which is now in the museum in the city hall. He was an incessant worker and delved into the secrets of nature with the devotion of a true scientist. He was born in Germany 74 years ago and came to America about 50 years ago, and has lived in Oregon since the Civil war.
