DRY LAND ALFALFA

GEO. ROBERTS SAYS TO GROW DIVERSIFIED CROPS.

If Oregon Can Prove to Easterners That Intensive Farming Will Pay, She Can Attract a Host of Farmers of Moderate Means—Thirty Years Ago the Red Clover Crank Was Laughed at in Iowa—Today Red Clover Is the Principal Crop in a Large Portion of That State—Make Thorough Test of Dry Land Crops.

Pendleton, April 3. Editor East Oregonian:—The question which seems uppermost in the different sections of the state at the present time is how best can they secure their share of the desirable homeseekers who are now coming west by the thousands.

Umatilla county with its two million acres of land can, by the adoption of modern methods of diversified farming, support at least four times its present population.

Then Pendleton should be a city of at least 25,000 inhabitants. We have, comparatively, a very small amount of rich bottom land along our various rivers and streams. The operation of our best wheat land is profitable but not capable under its present extensive management, of maintaining a sufficient population to insure a permanent or lasting prosperity to the community.

The stock interests from a range standpoint, does not add materially to our population. Our timber and mining industries are limited. Now what inducements can we offer to the farmers of the East, of moderate means to come and settle among us?

They, as a rule, are frugal, industrious men, who are not much inclined to take great risks, but are content with smaller profits than it takes to satisfy the native western man.

Raising wheat exclusively looks risky and expensive to them. Stock raising, by the range system, is new to them and also looks hazardous. In fact, a country that will admit of condensed and diversified farming is what most of these newcomers are looking for. The next question is: Will Umatilla county admit of this kind of farming?

Thirty-five and 40 years ago the man in Iowa who undertook to demonstrate that red clover, timothy and fruit could be produced there, was laughed at by his neighbors.

Today the most profitable field crop there is red clover, and the land that is producing two tons of clover there, per acre, is selling from $75 to $100 per acre.

A few days ago I examined a patch of alfalfa on the vacant lot just north of Dr. Cole's residence on North Main street. It has had no care and has been there for 12 or 15 years. The soil is not to exceed three feet in depth and is poor at that; but this alfalfa looks as rich and strong as any red clover I ever saw in Iowa and I believe with proper care and stand it would produce in one crop from one and a half to two tons per acre, besides there would be considerable fall and winter pasture.

Dry-land alfalfa is practically the same food for horses, cattle and hogs as red clover, and I am inclined to think it is the forage plant that will eventually reclaim this dry land of ours that is now considered almost worthless.

I would like to see the Fair association or the Commercial association take steps to demonstrate the value of the plant.

A hundred-acre field of fine growing alfalfa on some of the hills near Pendleton would be a tenfold better advertisement than the pamphlets and fine pictures that are being distributed to the homeseeker, and would cost less money.

Demonstrate to the Eastern farmer that this land will produce a crop every year equal to their red clover crop and he can locate here on 80 acres of land and support a family well with his cows, chickens and pigs. Respectfully,
GEO. R. ROBERTS.

War on Canada Thistles.

Leodore Fuchs has cooked up a bunch of business for the next grand jury. He says the law concerning the permitting of Canada thistles in Canada to even exist is drastic, and instead of warning the delinquents, he proposes, when the time comes to engage the attention of the prosecuting attorney and the grand jury with the thistle issue.

He says: "They are going to be bad this year. From the present indications and I notice some fellows here in town who are talking very strongly upon the present output of the last grand jury who ought to be out getting rid of their thistles. You bet, I mean business and I will have my evidence when the next grand jury meets. Yes, sir; I am in for reforms, when they affect the productiveness of the country. Down with the thistles and into the jails with the men who permit them."—Baker City Herald.

The Lewiston's Last Run.

The old steamer Lewiston, which has been operated on the Riparia-Lewiston run on Snake river for 11 years made her last trip Tuesday. The craft is to be knocked down and sections of it used in the construction of the new Lewiston, the hull of which is now being put together at Riparia. The Lewiston was built in 1894 to take the place of the ill-fated Annie Faxon, which blew up while en route to Lewiston, several of the crew and three passengers being killed.—Dayton Courier-Press.

Fair Grounds Cut Into Lots.

One of the prettiest locations in The Dalles for residences is the site of the old fair grounds, where lots are selling fast and building is continually going on. This morning A. Walther told us that just recently he has disposed of 10 or 12 lots. M. Bridgefarmer bought two and has his home completed. W. E. Rossman also has two and yesterday began his house, and M. Hoctor, who lives at Goldendale, has purchased six lots and will build soon.—The Dalles Chronicle.

MONTE IS KNOWN

SENTENCED UNDER THE COGNOMEN OF BENNETT.

He is Now Suspected of Complicity in the Escape and Arming of Tracy and Merrill, a Crime Which Carries With it the Death Penalty—Bennett (Monte) Sent Up From This County for Burglary.

Charley Monte, the Salem convict against whom there is strong evidence showing him to be one of the men who supplied Tracey and Merrill with their deadly 30-30 Winchester before their break, is from this county and was taken there by Sheriff Taylor in 1902, being sentenced to six years for burglary.

Since the publication of the story connecting Monte, or Bennett, as he was known here, with the Tracey and Merrill affair, his capture and short stay here have been recalled, and makes a very interesting story.

Bennett was wanted for having robbed the Richardson store at Helix, late in 1902, and was captured by Sheriff Taylor near Gibbon on December 2. He was found in a camp near that place, and was preparing to take a freight train when taken by the sheriff.

On the records in the sheriff's office the name of W. Bennett appears, and it was as such that the man was sentenced to serve six years in the penitentiary. His photograph, which was taken while he was here, and is now in the sheriff's gallery, is the same from which the cut which appeared in the Portland papers was made, and shows a heavy-faced man with a big neck.

Monte, or Bennett, is one of two who are suspected of having smuggled the guns into the work room of the penitentiary and thus made it possible for Tracey and Merrill to make their escape. The other man is now a convict in the Walla Walla prison. Should the evidence be such as to cause their conviction for the offense, they will both have to pay the death penalty, as they would be guilty of murder in the first degree, being accessories before the act.

When taken by Sheriff Taylor here, Bennett had been out of the penitentiary but about six months, during which time he is supposed to have helped his former fellow-con- victs.
