

The Latest Yet

SOUVENIR LETTER ALBUMS OF OREGON.

This is, without doubt, the latest invention in the way of a photograph souvenir and promises to become very popular.

The construction is similar to an envelope, when closed being about the size of an ordinary number six government envelope. Made with two sheets of letter paper and four sheets of views making in all eight different views in each booklet, and made in four different series or a total of 32 different views in the lot.

After writing the letter you simply moisten the gummed edges and seal it exactly the same as an envelope. Address and stamp the outside cover. The receiver merely tears off the gummed edges at the perforation, which is readily done, whereupon he finds his letter with the different views of the most popular and interesting scenes in this state.

WESTON WAS THE WINNER

SCORE OF 15 FOR THE BRICKYARD NINE.

Pendleton Could Make But 11 Tails in a Hotly Contested Game at the Alta Street Grounds Yesterday—Game Was Not Up to Expectations—More Practice Is Needed for the Home Team—Next Game at Weston on April 23.

Weston, 15; Pendleton, 11. It was a bad one, the game yesterday, and probably the less said about it the better. While Pendleton doubtless has the better team of the two and should have won the game, it would be unfair to the Weston boys to say that their victory was not justly theirs.

For the opening of the season, the game yesterday was a very unsatisfactory one, not only in that the home team was defeated but, also because the quality of ball played was far from being what was expected.

Since the Commercial association team was formed a few weeks ago its management has proclaimed it one of the best amateur teams in this part of the state and the people have been led to expect good things of it during the season. Certainly there are some good players in the local nine, but they scarcely showed it yesterday. If they expect to win victories a change or two will have to be made and the team will have to practice occasionally so that the players will know what positions they hold. Also they should be manly enough to play ball even if an error is made or the score be temporarily against them.

Below is yesterday's score:

BREED OF STRIPED HORSES.

Edinburgh Professors Study Peculiar Animals of the Sierra.

Prof. H. Caesar Ewart, a noted educator and naturalist of Edinburgh, Scotland, has arrived at Chihuahua, on his way to a remote and unexplored region of the Sierra Madre, in the extreme southwestern part of the state. He is accompanied by several other scientists, and the object of their expedition is to investigate the oft-heard report that there is a large drove of wild horses of most peculiar appearance in that part of Mexico.

These animals are said to be striped and bear a close resemblance to the zebra. They are said to make their home in a rich valley which is almost shut in by the towering cliffs of the mountains.

It is the theory of Professor Ewart that all horses were at one time striped and that their present colorings and absence of stripes are due to intermixing the breed. He has been studying the question for several years and recently finished an exhaustive research into the prehistoric remains of horses on the islands of Porto Rico and Jamaica.

The account of the existence of a large drove of striped horses in the Sierra Madre seems to be authentic. Long before white men had penetrated the almost inaccessible region, Indians who lived in the mountains told of having seen this drove of horses. About 15 years ago an American mining prospector named Hampton Bradley, who formerly lived at Parral, where he owned and operated the Marco mine, made a trip into the mountains. He was gone for about three months and upon his return he told of having visited the valley where he saw this drove of horses. He said that there were several thousand of the animals and that their feeding ground embraced many thousands acres of rich level land, with a small stream of water running through it.

No Printers in Texas "Pen."

A printing office, says a writer, is usually considered a rather tough place, and the newspaper worker a mighty bad man. Statistics, however, do not bear out that idea. Of 3899 in the Texas penitentiary, there is not a printer or a newspaper man, while there are ministers, lawyers, music teachers, doctors, bankers, cooks, photographers, barbers and members of the other professions and callings. The printer gets a bad name because the nature of his business teaches him to detect shame and scorn hypocrites.

A civil engineer in New York named Henning, predicted the subway fire and also the collapse of several large buildings in that city. Now he predicts the collapse of the entire subway system within 10 years as an effect of moisture, against which the precautions are trivial and superficial.

Sending Photographs by Wire.

The apparatus by which Dr. Arthur Korn, a German inventor, has succeeded in transmitting photographs about 500 miles over telegraph and telephone lines, depends for its action upon the changing electric resistance of selenium under the influence of light of varying intensity. A ray of light caused to pass systematically over the surface of a transparent film containing a photograph, falls upon a selenium cell whose electric resistance varies with the amount of light passing through different parts of the photograph. These variations are transmitted to the electric wire, and at the receiving end they vary the illumination of a small vacuum tube, which passes over a sensitized photographic paper synchronically with the ray of light moving over the film at the sending station. Thus a copy of the original photograph is produced.

REMINISCENCES OF WHITMAN MASSACRE

The passing of the aged Cayuse squaw, Elizabeth, at the Umatilla reservation, removes another character associated with the Whitman tragedy, November 29, 1847, at Walla Walla, 10 miles west of the city, says the Walla Walla Union.

Elizabeth was the daughter of the chief, Lat-a-chee, who once lived near the present site of Walla Walla. He was called "Beardy" because he allowed his beard to grow under his chin. He and his daughter assisted in the burial of Mrs. Whitman and the other victims of the massacre. Elizabeth's father was a preacher.

It was through his intervention that the women and children were spared. Eliza Spaulding, then 10 years old, was the only white person left at the Whitman mission who understood the Indian language. She attended a meeting he called, of all the Indians at the mission then, and pleaded with them a whole day with an eloquence that moved the Indian heart, thirsting for blood, to spare the women and children, already bereft of their protectors by the Cayuse tomahawk. His words prevailed. The helpless ones were not molested.

Eliza Spaulding interpreted the sermon to the tear-stricken, helpless band. It is the belief of many of the survivors that this 10 or 12-hour sermon of the noble hearted chief saved their lives.

Many incidents are told of those fearful days that followed, showing on how small a circumstance the fate of the whole party depended. "Beardy" ate at one of the tables of the survivors. He partook freely of molasses which he relished with the red man's appetite.

For several days after the chief lingered between life and death. Several times a day the women were informed that if "Beardy" died every one of them and the children, too, would be killed, and the terror-stricken women had no doubt but that the red men would keep their word, but the good hearted chief survived, and thus a second time saved the helpless ones from the tomahawk.

The Indians walked through the house where the women and children congregated for better protection, at any time of day or night it pleased their lordships; came in when a meal was prepared and sat down at the table, leaving only the dishes when they left.

The only time these people could depend on eating a meal they prepared, would be at a very early hour in the morning. The young Indian men would come in and lie down on the floor, and often go to sleep, and remain until morning. They were allowed to sleep undisturbed, for no one would dare awaken them.

They would say to the children, "Sing." The frightened little ones would sing until hoarse, when some Indian on the floor would call out "sing," and the terror-stricken ones would try again, fearing to refuse lest they should be killed.
