POINTS OF VIEW

CORRESPONDENT SHOWS UP INCONSISTENCIES.

Quotes the Oregonian to Prove the Unprofitableness of a City Following the Course That Paper Has Always Heretofore Advised—Correspondent Mentions Variable Weather in the Valleys of Jackson County—Cloudburst and Heavy Hail.

Eagle Point, Jackson County, June 10.—This valley is completely encircled by mountains, and our rains and storms are quite local in character. Jacksonville seems to be the storm center, with Medford a close second. A few days ago they had a young cloudburst over there, attended with considerable loss of life (chickens), and a brisk movement in high-priced real estate; but I am pleased to state the tendency of the real estate was downward.

On the high ridge or divide between Jacksonville and Applegate creek, there was a tremendous hailstorm. A man who passed that way told me the hail stones were as large as marbles, and laid eight inches deep on a level, and the forest trees were nearly stripped of their leaves.

I was surprised to see in an editorial in a recent Portland Oregonian, that they had made the astounding discovery that the license from the saloons did not pay the expense brought about by the traffic. Temperance people have been preaching this for years, but Scott has hooted at their figures, and stood for the saloons first, last, and all the time; the more the better. The city could not meet her running expenses without, and must soon go to the poorhouse. Why, under Mayor Williams the city collected more than $50,000 from saloons, gamblers and prostitutes; long live Williams.

Pocket Nerve Affects Vision.

It seems there has been a "change come over the spirit of his dreams," and what has produced it? It is curious how the pocket nerve affects the vision. A little twinge of that nerve frequently gives one a very altered point of view. The Oregonian knows, as every one else who thinks must know, that if it goes out over this broad land of ours, that every man, woman and child who passes in or out of the fair, must pass through a long lane, lined on each side with saloons and drunken rowdies, thieves, pick-pockets, pimps, prostitutes and such like ilk, the usual and natural concomitant of the saloon, hundreds, if not thousands of self-respecting people will stay away, to the great financial detriment of the fair, not to say anything of the moral aspect. It will reach farther and affect the immigration.

Many people in the East who look upon the people here as hardly civilized and still in the breech clout and moccasin period, and the fact that the metropolis of the state would allow such a state of affairs to exist, and more, to brazenly flaunt it in the faces of the visiting public, would go far to prove their opinion not far astray.

Oregonian Inconsistent.

The Oregonian is an able paper, but like some other able people, not always consistent. In the editorial referred to it says the council has outraged the decent part of the community by licensing these saloons, besides the fact that the extra cost of protecting life and property brought about by these saloons, will more than eat up all revenue derived from them; but in a later issue it says the saloon business is a "legitimate" business, just as much so as any other business, "but liable to abuse and should be kept back from public view." The quotations are mine.

Put the two statements together and what have you? First, that saloon licenses do not pay the cost engendered by the saloon, that they endanger life and property and outrage all moral decency, but second, all this is legitimate and proper if it is done on a back street!

Who Made Portland Democratic?

Scott's arguments sometimes sound as though he was short of material. During the gubernatorial campaign he said: "What will Roosevelt think if a democratic governor is elected? I am a republican? I am a republican, and always have been, and I admire Roosevelt very much; but I do not expect to ask him how I shall vote, neither do I care what he thinks about it; besides, who made it possible to elect a democratic governor in Oregon? The same rotten and corrupt ring which has made it possible to elect a democratic mayor in Portland. Time was once, within my own memory, when a man considered it an honor to say, 'I vote her straight, even if I know there is a horse thief on it.' But men are becoming more intelligent and are learning that a mere name neither leads the country to heaven or destruction.

I notice that some gambler in your city said Pendleton would be glad to get them back, and could not get along without them. If Pendleton, with all the resources back of her, has reached that point where her existence depends on the money wrung from the gambler and the prostitute, then the sooner she hides her festering carcass in oblivion, away from the view of a decent world, the better.

But that is all bosh. Towns in this valley without one-half the natural resources of Pendleton, are existing without the saloon or the gambler, or the public houses of prostitution and so on Pendleton.

If all the moral elements in Pendleton would make common cause, lay aside for the time being their names and creeds, and stand solidly for a clean, moral town, they could have it; but some are afraid of hurting their business, some of their political prospects, some are so prejudicial against some other organization they would rather the whole place would go to the bow-wows than to work in the same harness.

Personally, this matter does not trouble me. Through Christian parents I inherited clean blood with no craving for intoxicants, and it is no trouble for me to keep out of the saloons, and my boy does not seem disposed that way; but for the sake of the boys and the men who have the poison in their blood, and for the sake of the women and children who are the helpless victims of the traffic, whatever influence I may have will be on the side of clean Christian homes.

I am glad to see one paper which has the courage to stand up for pure homes and decent public morals.

PIONEERS OF OREGON.

Annual Reunion to Be Held in Portland This Week.

Portland, June 13.—Pioneers from all parts of the state will gather in this city next Thursday for the annual reunion and banquet of the Oregon Pioneer society.

Members of the society are requested to secure their badges of Secretary George H. Himes, at Pioneer headquarters in the rooms of the Oregon Historical society in the city hall and assemble at the Armory at 2 o'clock sharp Thursday afternoon.

Joseph Buchtel, grand marshal, assisted by aids and the women's reception committee, will receive the members and conduct them to one of the small halls in the Armory, where literary exercises will take place.

The souvenir pioneer badge embraces three pivotal ideas on which the Pacific coast states were founded. The picture of Captain Robert Gray emphasizes his discovery of the Columbia river in 1792; the portraits of Lewis and Clark, the explorers, in 1805, and a picture of a primitive home represented by a log cabin and ox teams, show the formative period between 1811 and 1859.

To Keep Sheep Out of Grant.

Tuesday a meeting of the citizens was held in Granite at which the question of keeping sheep and cattle out of the district was discussed.

It was decided to hire a man to post notices warning stockmen of the position taken by the residents and to also ride the lines for a short time. A subscription list was also started to raise funds to pay the expenses of the organization. It has been quite liberally responded to so far, but more funds will be required and it is hoped those interested will be on hand with their proportion.

So far there are at least 100 signatures on the paper wishing the large bands of stock to be kept out of the territory mentioned in the notices.—Granite Gem.

The state of education in Russia may be judged from the fact that there is only one village school for every 12,000 persons.
