IN CIRCUIT COURT.

Martin Murder Case Will Be Called Next Monday.

In the circuit court today the entire time has been occupied with the Manchester Insurance company-O. R. & N. case, and at 3 o'clock all of the witnesses had not yet finished testifying. Numerous mechanics were brought upon the stand by the railroad company to show the mechanism of their engine and the care exercised by the company to avoid fires. Monday morning the Martin murder trial will be called and it is said by the attorneys that the case will then be tried out, there being no desire on the part of the defense to postpone the trial until next fall. Considerable interest is being manifested in the coming suit, and it promises the most interesting legal struggle of the session.

SURPRISED AT APPOINTMENT.

Local Attorneys and Leading Citizens Had Not Considered Cotton a Candidate. Great surprise was expressed by local attorneys and politicians today at the announcement of the appointment of W. W. Cotton as federal judge. All admit that Mr. Cotton is highly qualified for the position, but few had considered him a candidate. His salary as attorney for the O. R. & N. is three times what the federal judge receives. It is thought, and while it is an honor to be appointed yet it was not thought that he would sacrifice the large salary for the honor.

It is admitted that Mr. Cotton is perhaps more highly qualified as a judge of law, than any other man in Oregon, inasmuch as his practice has brought him in contact with every statute on the books, and his association with Judge Bellinger has perhaps given him an insight into the position which no other man in the state enjoys.

Fort Monroe, June 17.—At dawn this morning four torpedo boat destroyers and three converted yachts made an attack on the fort. All were theoretically sunk and returned to the fleet. Charles McBee of Birch creek, is in the city today. Mr. McBee has just cut his first crop of alfalfa and is well pleased with the result. Although the weather has been most too cool for a rapid growth, yet the crop is very heavy.

D. C. Brownell, the well known irrigator and farmer of Umatilla, is in the city today on business. He has just cut his first crop of alfalfa on new land at Umatilla and has secured a fine stand this season. Where it Pays to Trade

OPENING YAQUINA HARBOR.

Natural Outlet of the Willamette Valley to the Ocean.

The opening of Yaquina bay to the commerce of the Willamette valley was once a dream to the farmers and manufacturers therein, says the Salem Journal. Upon the completion of the Oregon Pacific railroad to Yaquina bay and the establishment of a line of steamships from Yaquina to San Francisco, when, for a time all the wheat, wool, hops and other products were shipped through the port of Yaquina, then their dreams were realized for a time by the saving of from 8 to 10 cents on every bushel of wheat, barley and oats shipped, as well as a saving of thousands of dollars to the merchants of the Willamette valley and Southern Oregon, all of which helped to swell the bank accounts of the farmers and manufacturers of this rich territory.

But time changes all things except the policy of some of the leading newspapers toward Yaquina bay. With the increased demand for flour, lumber and other products in the Orient it became necessary to increase the tonnage of vessels in that trade, and with the opening of the Columbia river to commerce and the building of a deep water harbor at Astoria, and the passing of the old ways and methods when a vessel could only take on half cargo at Portland, and the balance was freighted down the river on barges and from them transferred to the ships at Astoria, and a big tariff towage on both the vessel and barge, then it was that the Yaquina could compete with the Columbia.

But after the bar was deepened and the drifting sands of the Columbia were dredged out, and deep water vessels could load at the docks in Portland for the Orient, then it was that Yaquina went out of business and the products of the Willamette valley were once more forced to go down the valley to Portland, and thus be transferred to the ocean-plying steamers, which were towed 118 miles to the high seas, it was then that the farmers and manufacturers of the Willamette valley had to again pay the additional tariff on all their products, and today the cars on the old O. P. railroad are running empty to the Yaquina, the only natural outlet to the commerce of the great Willamette valley.

O. R. & N. Issues Game Laws.

The freight department of the O. R. & N. has issued the game laws of Oregon and Washington and sent them as a circular to agents as a protection against shipping game out of season. The company is determined not to encourage unlawful hunting by shipping game when it is prohibited by law and all agents will see that the provisions of the law are enforced as far as the company is concerned.
