LAST GAME OF SEASON.

Hot Lake and Pendleton Will Play Ball Tomorrow.

What in all probability will be the last game of ball to be played here this season will be pulled off between Hot Lake and Pendleton tomorrow. The game will be played at the Matlock grounds, and will be called at 2:30.

At the game tomorrow afternoon the local people who have not yet seen the present Pendleton nine play ball, will have an opportunity to do so. This is the only game which the management of the nine arranged for aside from the games with Walla Walla the first of this week. The team tomorrow will be much the same as in the first game at Walla Walla. Lawrence Lienallen will serve behind the bat, Jerry King will pitch, Dale Slusher will probably fill first base, Froome being out of town; and the rest of the team will be as at Walla Walla.

FISH FOR WALLA WALLA.

Five Barrels of Trout to Be Placed in Mill Creek.

J. C. Scott, secretary of the Walla Walla Rod & Gun club, received a telegram yesterday that five barrels of rainbow trout would reach this city tomorrow morning to be planted in Mill creek, says the Walla Walla Union.

For some time the Rod & Gun club has directed its efforts to secure a restocking of Mill creek, which was once a fisherman's paradise, but which has suffered from pretended anglers who destroy the fish by improper methods. The club persevered until it gained the assistance of the United States government through Senator Ankeny, with the result as telegraphed to Mr. Scott yesterday. The trout are from a government hatchery in Oregon, and will require two or three years to become valuable to anglers.

ROADS IN FRANCE

A. C. RUBY TELLS OF CONDITIONS HE SAW.

Permanency of All Improvements in French Republic Is the First Thing Which Impresses a Tourist—Nogent Is About the Same Size of Pendleton and Has No Cross Streets on One Side for Nearly a Mile.

"In France the country roads are all macadamized and they are so well made that they compare well with most of the streets in the cities of the west," said A. C. Ruby, the well known horseman in speaking of the conditions which he found in the country districts of France while on his recent visit there.

But while he states that the roads are all hard and well made, he does not think that as a rule they have been laid out as well as have the highways in this country. Some of them according to his statement, appear as if they had been planned before there were such men as civil engineers. In fact, the supposition is probably correct for many of the highways there have been in use for centuries and have followed the results that were laid out at that time.

The above is also said to be true of many of the streets in the smaller cities of that republic. In speaking of Nogent, which is about the size of Pendleton, Mr. Ruby said that the main business street of the place is about three-fourths of a mile long and that there are side streets only on one side of the thoroughfare. On the other side he says that there is an unbroken line of buildings or high stone fences extending the entire distance.

While this arrangement is apparently satisfactory to the residents of Nogent, for they have allowed it to exist for centuries, Mr. Ruby does not think it would meet with popular approval here, where the people are used to a cross street every block.

One of the most noticeable things about the buildings and farm improvements in France, according to Mr. Ruby is their air of permanency. According to him most of the fences are of masonry of from six to eight feet in height and in some cases the walls or fences are roofed. Also nearly all of the stables are of stone and in many cases the stables and dwellings are built almost together if not actually so.

"BILLY" O'MALLEY SCALDED.

Accident to Well Known Pendleton Man on Southern Pacific.

The following account of an accident to "Billy" O'Malley, formerly of this city, is from the Eugene Guard of yesterday:

Engineer William O'Malley, running on the Eugene local, while on the way up from Portland Monday evening, was badly burned by steam from a clogged pipe and was suffering seriously when he reached this city.

The accident happened while this side of Salem and the steam from one of the clogged pipes spurted back, burning Mr. O'Malley's left hand and arm, and a spurt struck his face, scorching and searing the flesh on one cheek. On reaching Albany Mr. O'Malley, who was suffering great pain, telegraphed to Junction City, asking the company doctor to meet him at the station there on the arrival of the train.

Arriving there the injured man was administered to and he brought his engine into Eugene. On arrival a careful examination was made of his injuries, and it was found that fortunately the hurts were not dangerous, though exceedingly painful. When Mr. O'Malley awoke from the anesthetic in this city he showed that he was suffering great pain. His hand was bandaged temporarily and his face showed the effects of the burn.

FIREWORKS ON MT. HOOD.

Portland People Stretch Their Necks to Catch Glimpse of Red Fire.

George M. Weister and E. H. Moorhouse have returned from their Mt. Hood trip, where they went to set off the red fire on the night of July 4, says a Portland paper. They made the trip successfully, carried 50 pounds of red fire to the highest point of the mountain and lighted it at exactly 9 o'clock on the night of the Fourth.

While it was not noticeable from the exposition grounds, many people who were in town saw the light distinctly, and from The Dalles and Hood River it gave a brilliant illumination of the mountain. Both Mr. Weister and Mr. Moorhouse are convinced that if it had not been for the severe gale that was blowing on the mountain at the time, fanning the flame of the fire down and out instead of allowing it to blaze up and show a broad surface of light, that the illumination from Portland would have been entirely satisfactory.

The lights of the city and exposition grounds were easily seen from the mountain top and it was easy to distinguish the illumination of the Oregonian building and of the 1905 sign from the other lights. The searchlights, which play at the fair grounds each night were so plainly visible that the long flash of light across the sky which they make could be seen moving about as the lights were turned.

Mr. Moorhouse says if a powerful searchlight was placed on the summit of Mt. Hood that it would be seen for hundreds of miles around the country and prove one of the greatest advertisements for the Pacific Northwest which man could devise.

The prices of Alaskan salmon for this season have been fixed as follows: Pinks, 75; medium reds, 85 and reds, $1. These prices are 10 cents lower on each variety than the price paid last year.
